Dead Men's Money J. S. Fletcher,2015-10-29 The very beginning of this affair which involved me before I was aware of it in as much villainy and wickedness as ever man heard of was of course that spring evening now ten years ago whereon I looked out of my mother s front parlour window in the main street of Berwick upon Tweed and saw standing right before the house a man who had a black patch over his left eye an old plaid thrown loosely round his shoulders and in his right hand a stout stick and an old fashioned carpet bag He caught sight of me as I caught sight of him and he stirred and made at once for our door If I had possessed the power of seeing more than the obvious I should have seen robbery and murder and the very devil himself coming in close attendance upon him as he crossed the pavement But as it was I saw nothing but a stranger and I threw open the window and asked the man what he might be wanting Lodgings he answered jerking a thickly made thumb at a paper which my mother had that day set in the transom above the door Lodgings You ve lodgings to let for a single gentleman I m a single gentleman and I want lodgings For a month maybe more Money no object Thorough respectability on my part Few needs and modest requirements Not likely to give trouble Open the door I went into the passage and opened the door to him He strode in without as much as a word and not waiting for my invitation lurched heavily he was a big heavy moving fellow into the parlour where he set down his bag his plaid and his stick and dropping into an easy chair gave a sort of groan as he looked at me Dead Men's Money Joseph Smith Fletcher,1920 Colton 911:
