

Introduction

- In PSYCHIATRY, signs and symptoms are not as clearly demarcated as in other fields of medicine, they often overlap.
- Because of this, disorders in psychiatry are often described as syndromes, a constellation of signs and symptoms that together make up a recognizable condition.
- SIGNS are any indication of a medical condition that can be objectively observed (i.e. by someone other than the patient).
- Symptoms is merely any manifestation of a condition that is apparent to the patient (i.e. something consciously affecting the patient). These are subjective experiences.
