Nutrition In The Infant:

Infant Nutrition B. A. Rolls, Ann Walker, 2013-11-11 Few people doubt that the mother's milk provides the best food for the full term infant during the first few months of life when the digestive absorptive and excretory systems are relatively immature. The development of the digestive enzymes is detailed in Chapter 4. The significance of this immaturity first emerged as a consequence of the pioneering work of Professor Robert McCance and Dr Elsie Widdowson in human nutrition when they studied the electrolyte and nitrogen excretion of babies and young animals. To quote Professor McCance: 'Inefficient though the kidneys were by adult standards they were capable of maintaining homeostasis provided the infant and animals were growing while being fed on food of exactly the right composition that is the milk of the mother' (Ashwell 1993). One should not forget that although the mother protects the developing baby against much nutritional abuse the baby may be still be affected by maternal nutrition and this is discussed in Chapter 2. The superior qualities of breast milk are still recognized and research continues to discover yet more factors in breast milk significant to the health of the baby for possible inclusion in formulas. The immature stage of development of the baby means that while enough nutrients for optimal growth of all tissues are required excessive quantities may cause intoxication. Tight specifications are essential since unlike the adult the newborn depends on a single food.

The Nutrition of the Infant (Classic Reprint) Ralph Vincent, 2015-07-27 Excerpt from The Nutrition of the Infant In his endeavour to make his practice as exact and scientific as possible the author was at one time greatly discouraged by the fact that infant feeding apparently presented almost insuperable obstacles to its rational management in health and to exact diagnosis and treatment in the presence of disorder While this applied to some extent to the management of breast feeding it applied with greater force to substitute feeding In hospital and private practice he was only too familiar with the various attempts to meet the requirements and had frequent opportunities of testing the results of practically every method at all commonly used But there were many failures and what was even more unsatisfactory the successes were achieved by means so essentially empirical that they taught no lesson for the future It must be confessed that others were satisfied where the author was greatly discontent For it was said to be unreasonable to expect that artificial feeding should be so conducted that its results could be at all comparable with those of breast feeding This attitude seemed to be the more serious in view of the number of women unable or unwilling to nurse their infants It was under these circumstances that the author turned to the work of Dr T M Rotch of Boston About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works

Nutrition Support for Infants and Children at Risk Richard J. Cooke, Yvan Vandenplas, Ulrich Wahn, 2007-01-01 Adequate nutrition is especially important during infancy and childhood where even short periods of malnutrition have long lasting effects on growth development and health in adult life There are several high risk scenarios for the development of malnutrition which are the focus of the current publication Atopic diseases gastrointestinal disorders and preterm delivery For the pediatric allergist it is important to understand the mechanisms regulating IgE responses to food proteins since they may also be the earliest markers for the atopic march As breastfeeding seems to have only limited effects regarding the atopic march other measures to modulate infantile immune responses have to be taken including the use of hypoallergenic formulae or the addition of probiotics or prebiotics to infant formulae The second part of this book highlights the functional properties of nutrition with regard to diseases of the gastrointestinal tract and the ensuing chronic alterations of gastrointestinal function Topics addressed include the molecular basis of some diseases main causes of and nutritional measures in chronic enteropathy including the role of parenteral and enteral nutrition stressed mucosa and the role of nutrition in cholestatic liver disease Nowadays smaller and more immature infants are surviving but the smaller the infant the greater the accrued deficit as nutritional needs change with advancing maturity and one formulation may not meet all requirements Furthermore there are no sensitive accurate and precise measures of nutritional outcome The net effect of these uncertainties is that all very low birth weight infants are growth retarded at hospital discharge Strategies for improving growth in these high risk infants are at the center of the last part of this publication
