additions and substitutions that Dostoevsky brought into the text It demonstrates how young Dostoevsky s free translation of Eug nie Grandet predicts the creation of his own literary characters themes and other aspects of his literary output that are now recognized as Dostoevsky s signature style It investigates the changes that Dostoevsky made while working on Balzac s text and analyzes the complex transplantation of Balzac s imagery motifs and character portraiture from Eug nie Grandet into Dostoevsky s own writing later on

sent there by his father Guillaume Charles does not realise that his father has gone bankrupt and is planning to take his own life Guillaume reveals this to his brother Felix in a confidential letter which Charles has carried Charles is a spoilt and indolent young man who is having an affair with an older woman His father's ruin and suicide are soon published in the newspaper and his uncle Felix reveals his problems to him Felix considers Charles to be a burden and plans to send him off overseas to make his own fortune However Eugenie and Charles fall in love with each other and hope to eventually marry She gives him some of her own money to help with his trading ventures Meanwhile Felix hatches a plan to profit from his brother's ruin He announces to Cruchot des Bonfons that he plans to liquidate his brother's business and so avoid a declaration of bankruptcy and therefore save the family honour Cruchot des Bonfons volunteers to go to Paris to make the arrangements provided that Felix pays his expenses The des Grassins then visit just as they are in the middle of discussions and the banker des Grassins volunteers to do Felix's bidding for free So Felix accepts des Grassins offer instead of Cruchot des Bonfons The business is liquidated and the creditors get 46% of their debts in exchange for their bank bills Felix then ignores all demands to pay the rest whilst selling the bank bills at a profit By now Charles has left to travel overseas He entrusts Eugenie with a small gold plated cabinet which contains pictures of his parents Later Felix is angered when he discovers that Eugenie has given her money all in gold coins to Charles This leads to his wife falling ill and his daughter being confined to her room Eventually they are reconciled and Felix reluctantly agrees that Eugenie can marry Charles In 1827 Charles returns to France By now both of Eugenie's parents have died However Charles is no longer in love with Eugenie He has become very wealthy through his trading but he has also become extremely corrupt He becomes engaged to the daughter of an impoverished aristocratic family in order to make himself respectable He writes to Eugenie to announce his marriage plans and to break off their engagement He also sends a cheque to pay off the money that she gave him Eugenie is heartbroken especially when she discovers that Charles had been back in France for a month when he wrote to her She sends back the cabinet Eugenie then decides to become engaged to Cruchot des Bonfons on two conditions One is that she remains a virgin after marriage and the other is that he agrees to go to Paris to act for her to pay off all the debts due Guillaume Grandet's creditors Cruchot des Bonfons carries out the debt payment in full This comes just in time for Charles who finds that his future father in law objects to letting his daughter marry the son of a bankrupt When Charles meets Cruchot des Bonfons he discovers that Eugenie is in fact far wealthier than he is During his brief stay at Saumur he had assumed from the state of their home that his relatives were poor Cruchot des Bonfons marries Eugenie hopeful of becoming fabulously wealthy However he dies young and at the end of the book Eugenie is a very wealthy widow of thirty three having now inherited her husband's fortune At the end of the novel although by the standards of the time she should be unhappy childless and unmarried she is instead quite content with her lot She has learned to live life on her own terms and has also learned of the hypocrisy and shallowness of the bourgeois and that her best friends will come from the lower classes
