AL DEWLEN

The legend of a man whose thirst for revenge was as savage as the scar across his chest—the scar left by a branding-iron

Night Of The Tiger

Wolfgang Schneider

Night Of The Tiger:

The Night of the Tiger Al Dewlen, 1956 With 17 000 bulging his saddlebags Julius Rupp knows he can go back to his home town without shame As he approaches Coldiron his mind is filled with a pleasurable though uncertain sense of anticipation What of the beautiful young bride he left in anger eleven years ago of the townspeople who could only think of him as a hotheaded fool But the money the stake he promised himself when he left would ease his home coming to Jessie and the town would have to accept him as a man in his own right When he spots the campfire by the trail Julius Rupp s only thought is to ask the camper to share his fire and campsite for the night Too late he discovers it is a rustler s branding fire with the calf tied and thrown nearby No sooner does he realize this than he is taken by surprise by three men who accuse him of being the rustler He is tied thrown to the ground and his chest branded with T for thief When he comes to the next morning he finds his 17 000 gone and few handfuls of dry range grass stuffed into his saddlebags A new Julius Rupp rides into Coldiron his chest raw and burning with its new wound and inside a thirst for revenge a compulsion to destroy as he had been destroyed With all his guilt and pride Julius finds his wife Jessie She is planning to marry Brooks Durham a town banker but she has never forgotten Julius also finds Maria Quintera the lovely Mexican girl afire to repair her sullied reputation Julius s revenge brings to each of the men who branded him a scar just as horrible and painful as the one they burned into his chest In the first flush of his mission of reprisal Julius enjoys the sweet taste of revenge but it does not last as the realization comes to him that the implications of his original desertion of Jessie and his return are more subtle and complicated than he first suspected Against the background of a small Texas frontier town Al Dewlen has written a novel in the great tradition of American Western literature It is a story at once violent and tender in which the sights and sounds and the daily tempo of life of a Texas town in the 1880s are vividly realized From jacket flap The Tiger [The Night of the Tiger].
