

Percy Lubbock, Londoner by birth, but during Eton and Cambridge years homing to Earlham Hall in Norfolk, had always a taste and talent for literature. In the early 1900's, he was in constant association with the famous English men of letters of his time, and with Henry James in particular.

Extreme reticence and modesty of claim served nowise toward making loud renown for him; he put out nine volumes where others were publishing thirty or forty. But the quality of these nine was applauded and not forgotten in the high places of criticism.

At the point on the Italian Riviera where the Apennines plunge off into the Mediterranean, there is perched on a flat spot above crags an exquisite white villa. This was created before World War II by Mr. Lubbock and his wife Lady Sybil, also a writer. The house is an achievement of beauty without and within, and here, almost surrounded by the amethyst sea, he spends his retirement with books and special friends. In 1952 in the Queen's Honors List he was awarded the order of Commander of the British Empire, C. B. E.

The Physiology of the Novel Nicholas Dames, 2007-09-27 How did the Victorians read novels Nicholas Dames answers that deceptively simple question by revealing a now forgotten range of nineteenth century theories of the novel a range based in a study of human physiology during the act of reading He demonstrates the ways in which the Victorians thought they read and uncovers surprising responses to the question of what might have transpired in the minds and bodies of readers of Victorian fiction His detailed studies of novel critics who were also interested in neurological science combined with readings of novels by Thackeray Eliot Meredith and Gissing propose a vision of the Victorian novel reader as far from the quietly immersed being we now imagine as instead a reader whose nervous system was addressed attacked and soothed by authors newly aware of the neural operations of their public Rich in unexpected intersections from the British response to Wagnerian opera to the birth of speed reading in the late nineteenth century The Physiology of the Novel challenges our assumptions about what novel reading once did and still does to the individual reader and provides new answers to the question of how novels influenced a culture's way of reading responding and feeling

The Literary Theory Toolkit Herman Rapaport, 2011-05-06 The Literary Theory Toolkit offers readers a rich compendium of key terms concepts and arguments necessary for the study of literature in a critical theoretical context Includes varied examples drawn from readily available literary texts spanning all periods and genres Features a chapter on performance something not usually covered in similar texts Covers differing theories of the public sphere ideology power and the social relations necessary for the understanding of approaches to literature

The New Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature: Volume 4, 1900-1950 George Watson, I. R. Willison, 1972-12-07 More than fifty specialists have contributed to this new edition of volume 4 of The Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature The design of the original work has established itself so firmly as a workable solution to the immense problems of analysis articulation and coordination that it has been retained in all its essentials for the new edition The task of the new contributors has been to revise and integrate the lists of 1940 and 1957 to add materials of the following decade to correct and refine the bibliographical details already available and to re shape the whole according to a new series of conventions devised to give greater clarity and consistency to the entries Creative Writing and the New Humanities Paul Dawson, 2005 This polemic account provides a fresh perspective on the importance of Creative Writing to the emergence of the new humanities and makes a major contribution to current debates about the role of the writer as public intellectual
