imagining higher education and their role in it Higher Education on the Brink will serve as a guide for determining what difficult questions need to be asked and how to answer those questions in a manner that will position the college for the future with support from the college community generating increased opportunities for student and operational success

Lessons from the NFL for Managing College Enrollment Jerome A. Lucido, 2013 How colleges determine who is recruited who merits admission who receives student aid and of what variety which classes are offered and when and what kind of assistance is provided to students all comprise a complex system and an emerging field known as enrollment management Outside of the world of higher education administration however the term enrollment management has little meaning But as the United States looks to increase the percentage its population entering and graduating from college this larger process must be more fully understood That colleges manage their enrollments only makes sense After all enrollments make up the bulk of institutional revenue at universities and colleges and students bring the energy diversity and talent that comprise the potential for learning and academic success So it is to be expected that colleges and universities will manage enrollments to meet their particular missions needs and interests What can be said however about the way college enrollments are managed on behalf of the public and national interest This paper addresses this question by examining institutional enrollment goals and the enrollment decisions and strategies that are used in service to them Further the paper addresses how institutional goals may be directed in greater measure toward the public interest In doing so a framework is provided for better public information and more informed public policy with respect to college enrollment in the United States Specifically this paper begins with a focus on the imbalance in higher education results in relation to the educational attainment needs of the country Next it identifies fundamental conditions to which institutions respond when establishing enrollment goals and highlights the strategies that enrollment managers employ in balancing the competing demands of equality of opportunity with institutional ambitions and revenue requirements The paper establishes that enrollment strategies favor economically advantaged students and identifies public disinvestment poor economic conditions and the highly competitive positional marketplace of higher education as factors that drive enrollment strategies and lead to lopsided educational results for the nation It then takes a novel turn by adapting the unlikely example of the National Football League as a promising model to moderate harmful competition regain public trust and focus on educational results as measures of quality as opposed to the present rankings centered emphasis on characteristics of the incoming student body It is common knowledge that the NFL establishes rules that temper competitive practices that could harm the game of football and its member franchises The intent of these rules is to focus competition on the field of play contain costs and permit small market teams to compete with those teams with greater resources Drawing on this example this paper develops the concept of a league of member institutions to establish mechanisms of public information public policy and institutional goal setting in order to focus attention on educational results and broaden the service of higher education to the nation It also calls on education policymakers and others to provide favorable conditions to allow such cooperation to occur Specifically this paper suggests that American higher education would be more inclusive and results driven if colleges and universities formed a league to establish rules of competition and progress in the public interest The goals of this Higher Education League would be broader participation increased rates of success and reduced costs This paper concludes by suggesting that higher education leaders public policymakers philanthropic foundations corporate entities and others engage in and support the exploration formation and start up of the league Contains 35 endnotes This paper was written with the assistance of Sandy Baum Robert Frank Don Heller Don Hossler David Kalsbeek and William Tierney Enrollment Management Perry R. Rettig,2021-07-01 University leaders both senior leadership and boards of trustees are desperately looking for answers to enrollment concerns across the nation This book is written by current practitioners in the field These people live enrollment management every day they know the field They can talk to lay leaders from a practitioner s perspective Readers will enjoy reading a book that helps them to quickly understand enrollment management and how to quickly make a difference
