

METAMORPHIC ROCKS

Igneous and sedimentary rocks can be altered to form a third type of rock, known as metamorphic rock. Sometimes these rocks are very brightly coloured, and may contain precious minerals. Metamorphic rocks also weather and break down into smaller particles. This cycle of never-ending changes in rocks is called the rock cycle.

FORMATION OF METAMORPHIC ROCK

Metamorphic means that the rock has changed form. Metamorphic rocks form when high temperature and pressure alter existing igneous and sedimentary rocks. Metamorphic rocks can also be formed from other metamorphic rocks.

Rock changes into metamorphic form when it experiences intense heat and extreme pressure. These changes can be physical or chemical, and include the formation of new minerals not seen in igneous or sedimentary rocks. For example, garnets and the precious gems sapphire and ruby occur in metamorphic rocks.

TYPES OF METAMORPHISM

Metamorphic rocks can be formed deep beneath the Earth's surface, where the pressure is very high. The great weight of the rock above means the pressure can be thousands of times greater than the pressure of the atmosphere at the Earth's surface. Pressure alone may be enough to alter the rock.

It also gets much hotter as you go deeper and deeper into the Earth's crust and mantle. The temperatures may be hundreds to thousands of degrees. Heat alone can alter rocks. This suggests that most of the lower part of the Earth's crust is probably made of metamorphic rock.

Extreme heat and pressure can also be caused by movements within the Earth's crust. The crust is broken into massive plates larger than continents, called tectonic plates. These move around on the mantle, and can collide and scrape past each other, and are heated up and compressed in the process. Some parts of the crust may sink down under other parts. Metamorphism over a wide area as described is called regional metamorphism.

A second type of metamorphism occurs in rocks that come into contact with hot magma as it pushes through the mantle and crust. This type is called contact metamorphism and it occurs in particular local places on a much smaller scale than regional metamorphism. It means that the metamorphic rocks can also form in the crust near the surface. The sites for metamorphism are shown in the diagram below.
