

EVOLUTION OF STARS

After 10 billion years, the small star will run out of hydrogen and starts fusing helium, which causes the star to expand to a red giant

Planetary Nebula

After the star runs out of helium, the star will try to combine carbon, which the star can't combine. So the gas spreads apart from the star leaving behind a carbon dense white dwarf.

White Dwarf

When the white dwarf runs out of its remaining energy, it loses its brightness and becomes a brown dwarf.

After the star explodes, the star can do two different things based on its size

1. It can form a very dense NEUTRON STAR
2. It can form the most densest object in the universe, a BLACK HOLE

Role Of Dust In The Formation Of Stars:

The Role of Dust in the Formation of Stars Hans U. Käufl, Ralf Siebenmorgen, 2013-06-29 This ESO workshop which took place in September 1995 on a topic that at a first glance could be considered rather specialized attracted an unpredictably large number of scientists This certainly reflects the importance of this field which has lost its seemingly esoteric character in a wider astro physical context To give as much room as possible in these proceedings to the targeted talks no presentation of the Very Large Telescope Observatory has been included All readers missing such a presentation are reminded that up to date in depth information about the VLT status is available electronically 1 Papers were given concerning observations in the entire electromagnetic spectrum from x rays to mm waves i e exceeding 22 octaves in frequency The VLT as any ground based optical observatory can only address at best 7 octaves Nevertheless the VLT most likely the only ground based observatory specifically designed to access all these 7 octaves of the electromagnetic spectrum practically in parallel will undoubtedly be a tool of extreme value to this field Astrophysics Principles Naveen
