Rice In West Africa:

Deep Roots Edda L. Fields-Black, 2008-10-20 Mangrove rice farming on West Africa's Rice Coast was the mirror image of tidewater rice plantations worked by enslaved Africans in 18th century South Carolina and Georgia. This book reconstructs the development of rice growing technology among the Baga and Nalu of coastal Guinea beginning more than a millennium before the transatlantic slave trade. It reveals a picture of dynamic pre-colonial coastal societies quite unlike the static homogenous pre-modern Africa of previous scholarship. From its examination of inheritance, innovation and borrowing, Deep Roots fashions a theory of cultural change that encompasses the diversity of communities, cultures and forms of expression in Africa and the African diaspora.

This title was first published in 2001. The West Africa Rice Development Association (WARDA) was established in the early 1970s to help farmers increase rice production. Africa is the only continent whose population has grown faster than its food production; this shortfall provokes the syndrome of poverty, hunger and violence. There, WARDA first attempted to alleviate the food deficit by introducing high yielding imported crop varieties. This strategy drove the green revolution in Asia and Latin America but failed in Africa. This book recounts WARDA's revival after nearly succumbing in the 1980s. Not only did the programme have to deal with a harsh agricultural environment but also with severe economic, political and social constraints. WARDA made crucial advances in rice research and also coped successfully with non-scientific challenges. WARDA serves as a thriving example of a combined international research center and a regional organization.
