During the early summer months in Michigan, the most common insects that are reported to bite dogs are the ticks, fleas and mosquitoes. These insects are most likely to bite dogs that are outdoors, especially in wooded areas. Ticks are small, oval-shaped insects that attach themselves to the skin of their hosts and feed on their blood. Fleas are small, wingless insects that also feed on the blood of their hosts. Mosquitoes are small, winged insects that bite dogs and humans and can transmit diseases. To protect your dog from these insects, it is important to use a good quality insect repellent and to check your dog for ticks and fleas regularly. If you find any ticks or fleas on your dog, it is important to remove them as soon as possible to prevent infection. Mosquitoes can be kept away from your dog by using a mosquito net or by keeping your dog indoors during the evening hours.
