Treaties Diane L. Katz, 1996 The title of the Project Demonstrating Excellence is Treaties Making Peace With Yourself and With Others Synthesizing traditional conflict resolution theory and practice and the Native American Medicine Wheel into two models one for the resolution of internal conflict and the other for the resolution of conflict within organizations was the goal of the project It was assumed that conflict between individuals has the chance of more effective resolution if the disputants first internally resolve issues that they have about the dispute and their opponents In this way the transformative model of conflict resolution would be used the transformative model is one that addresses personal change and the resolution of disputes with personal change taking primary importance Discussions with numerous individuals took place including members of the Doctoral Committee the information gotten from courses discussions and independent study was summarized the resources that were chosen for the project were included Buddhist practices were used as a philosophical backdrop and personal learning the role of the mediator facilitator was examined as well as the role of commitment in the process of resolving conflicts as well as for transformation
