

Geophysical Survey in the Archaeological Record:

The Archaeological Investigations Project

With the advent of PPG14 (Planning Policy Guidance note 14) in 1999, archaeology in England has developed within a detailed urban context (Government 2000). This has seen the use of geophysical techniques as a rapid evaluation tool in planning related archaeology (Figure 1). This new important survey can greatly enhance the known archaeology of a site and its surrounding environs, for the case of developments it can be an invaluable way of locating structures to target the archaeology. The variety of methods and availability (investment types) means that the most appropriate method can be chosen for a project and by combining a number of methods a very detailed picture of the site can often be built up. Personal and public research projects also utilize geophysical survey techniques providing an essential research tool with quickly accessible results that can be used to illustrate the need for further work, and develop future strategies (see Figure 2).

Figure 2. Proportion of planning related to research related non planning geophysical investigations recorded in England 1996-2000.

The Archaeological Investigations Project, funded by English Heritage, seeks to record and provide a picture of all archaeological investigations undertaken in England, year by year. It provides details of archaeological interventions for each county and survey authority in England and is the only systematically researched up to date record of its kind in England. The project researchers visit all county councils, commercial units and organisations that undertake regional fieldwork, while other sources are contacted for ground surveys. In addition to this, AIP has recently published Archaeology after PPG14: archaeological investigations in England 1996-2000 (2001). An analysis of the changing character and distribution of archaeological work in England since the introduction of PPG14.

The development and availability of affordable, more timely equipment and data processing packages means that more active local archaeological movements can afford at least basic monitoring equipment. This provides a useful non invasive research tool which enables us to employ the broader public knowledge of archaeological sites and potentially contribute immensely to the enhancement of the local SMITHIAN Sites and Monuments Record Heritage Environment Record.

For these local government and commercial units that more often geophysical survey in their capacity of archaeology. The number of specialist geophysical companies have grown significantly and within a range of commercial and non profit (Figure 6) to address the requirements. Apart from the local market it also becomes a very cost-effective way of also providing people in archaeological areas. The Council for Independent Archaeology have been developing a list of specialist units and at least 25 units are currently in use by CEA members. The more affordable commercial and cost of use to the surveyor means that many public commercial archaeological units pursue their own equipment.

This alignment that an increasing number of geophysical surveys have been undertaken by a greater number of organisations just on their own the past decade (Figure 7), and that a wealth of information is becoming available. AIP aims to record these events and map the trends which they analysis reveals.

AIP has already recorded geophysical surveys which form part of a broader evaluation consisting of a number of archaeological techniques, specialist geophysical surveys were recorded on the English Heritage Geophysical Survey Database. The CEA contains details of all ACP geophysical surveys dating back to 1972, as well as a large number of other surveys carried out by other organisations and individuals, either registered as a requirement of government for surveys to be conducted on a scheduled ancient monument, locally within 100 of the Historic Monuments, or used in conjunction to be included in the database.

The proliferation of geophysical surveys during the 1990s (Figure 8) means, however, that a more comprehensive approach was needed for tracking down and recording the events, extent and distribution of geophysical surveys of all kinds. These data collections (2001) onwards for events undertaken in England now include all geophysical survey work. It is hoped that this sample that be used to support and enhance already existing data sets.

Initial analysis has produced some interesting results, such as the increasing dependence on equipment in the primary survey techniques and the dramatic increase in the use of GPR in archaeological investigations. One of the aims is to compare to data collection from county by will be more comprehensive and therefore more easily comparable on a national scale.

Biological Diversity Paul E. Hatcher, Nick Battey, 2011-03-23 Biological Diversity takes a fresh innovative approach to the teaching of biodiversity Rather than detailing and cataloguing the major taxa and their evolutionary relationships the authors have selected 18 groups of organisms and used these as a framework in which to discuss the species and their interactions with man and each other There is a strong narrative theme throughout the exploited and the exploiters and in many cases there is emphasis on the historical context A wide range of organisms are covered from the unicellular to birds and mammals and with an equal consideration of plants and animals Species have been chosen for their ability to best illustrate particular biological principles and for their strong interaction with other species After an introduction the book is divided into two parts Exploited and Exploiters Each of the chapters although linked to each other forms a stand alone essay They are scientifically rigorous up to date and do not shy away from addressing some controversial issues Chapters have text boxes highlighting important issues and concepts lists of further reading and references In addition to tables and figures the book has a selection of original illustrations drawn by leading artist Steven Appleby This fresh approach will appeal to all those interested in the biological sciences and aims to be accessible to people with a diversity of backgrounds It will prove particularly useful to biology students enabling them to get to grips with important biological principles and concepts that underpin the diversity of life and the interrelationship of humans with other groups of organisms

The Forest, Park and Palace of Clarendon, C. 1200-c. 1650 Amanda Richardson, 2005 Reconstructing an actual conceptual and documented Wiltshire landscape The main argument of this thesis is that the landscape and locality of Clarendon Forest and Park some 6 km east of Salisbury Wiltshire England were strongly influenced by the presence or later absence of Clarendon Palace which fell into decay in the late fifteenth century The first sure evidence of a royal residence at Clarendon dates from the reign of Henry I 1100 1135 although the site may well have Saxon connections A primary aim of this work is to restore the wider conceptual landscape by considering the forest alongside the relict landscape of the park and it is argued throughout that because medieval forests are archaeologically elusive the best way to achieve this is through an intensive documentary methodology Attention is drawn throughout to the capacity of documents to illustrate how estates were managed over time The argument representing an unprecedented systematic study of manuscript sources for Clarendon Park and Forest held at central and regional record offices is supported by references to printed primary sources It has resulted in the compilation of a main computer database listing over 800 relevant documents held at the Public Record Office alone from which those that might prove most useful were selected and transcribed The transcriptions arranged by subject form several substantial and searchable electronic databases facilitating cross checking and comparison The written sources themselves have informed the structure of the work and help to illustrate that this unique landscape and locality was indeed profoundly influenced by the existence of a royal park and palace at its centre Nevertheless what has emerged strongly in the course of the study are the myriad ways in which the forest in turn shaped the lifecycle of the palace

A Cultural History of Gardens in the Medieval Age Michael Leslie, 2015-04-02 The Middle Ages was a time of great upheaval the period between the seventh and fourteenth centuries saw great social political and economic change The radically distinct cultures of the Christian West Byzantium Persian influenced Islam and al Andalus resulted in different responses to the garden arts of antiquity and different attitudes to the natural world and its artful manipulation Yet these cultures interacted and communicated trading plants myths and texts By the fifteenth century the garden as a cultural phenomenon was immensely sophisticated and a vital element in the way society saw itself and its relation to nature A Cultural History of Gardens in the Medieval Age presents an overview of the period with essays on issues of design types of gardens planting use and reception issues of meaning verbal and visual representation of gardens and the relationship of gardens to the larger landscape

Monuments, Ritual and Regionality Jodie Lewis, 2005 The complex archaeological and geological legacy that North Somerset boasts often means that certain periods may be ignored Jodie Lewis's report focuses on the sometimes neglected Neolithic evidence found all over the area looking at well recognised sites such as Stanton Drew and Stoney Littleton and performing an in depth survey on the area as a whole The study critically assesses the evidence for Neolithic activity in Northern Somerset and includes an analysis of the monuments cave deposits and flint scatters as well as presenting new data and interpretations

Rough Quarries, Rocks and Hills Miles Russell, 2001 The Neolithic was a period of prolific activity for the South Downs in Sussex when enclosures and monuments were being built ditches cut large areas cleared and flint was extracted from the ground This study features one of the last great unpublished excavation archives relating to fieldwork conducted on the Neolithic monuments of the South Downs carried out by John Henry Pull in the 1920s 50s It includes reports from four major areas of flint mining Blackpatch Church Hill Cissbury and Tolmere largely based on contemporary records and accounts with comments and observations from Miles Russell The specialist reports and studies of artefact assemblages are to be published in a separate report
