In today's knowledge economy, intellectual currency is getting transferred from one country to another, and the physical boundaries are no hindrance anymore when compared to the situation three decades back. No wonder universities in the United States are attracting students from all over the world. Two primary reasons of such attraction are: i) quality of education provided by educational institutions in the United States is very high, and ii) the return of investment on education is phenomenally high. Despite growing influx of students from various countries, little is known about the whole process of educational system and the way in which inputs are transformed into outputs to various students. In general, they learn on their own following the concept of learning while doing. At this juncture, this book is written with the purpose of providing students and public about what is contained in the black box: a sequence of the entire process of what students need to know from the beginning of entering the United States until they get out of the universities to get employed.

Faculty mentoring programs greatly benefit the institutions that have instituted them and are effective in attracting and retaining good faculty. Prospective faculty members commonly ask about mentoring at on-campus interviews and indicate that it is a consideration when choosing a position. Mentoring programs also increase the retention rate of junior faculty, greatly reducing recruitment costs and particularly help integrate women, minority, and international faculty members into the institution while providing all new hires with an orientation to the culture, mission, and identity of the college or university. The book provides step-by-step guidelines for setting up planning and facilitating mentoring programs for new faculty members, whether one-on-one or using a successful group model developed and refined over twenty-five years by the authors. While it offers detailed guidance on instituting such programs at the departmental level, it also makes the case for establishing school or institutional level programs and delineates the considerable benefits and economies of scale these can achieve. The authors provide guidance for mentors and mentees on developing group mentoring and individual mentor-protégé relationships; the corresponding chapters being available online for separate purchase as well as detailed outlines and advice to department chairs.
