

METHODOLOGY

The methodology used to determine the 2019 Top 100 Global Innovators was developed by Thomson Reuters and approved by several IP-serving external organizations. While the final methodology is proprietary, we recognize the need for a deeper explanation of how the list was compiled.

The following is a closer look at the data used and how it was calculated and analyzed. Thomson Reuters Docket Watch® Patents Index™ (DWPI™), Docket Watch® Citation Index™, Quadrilateral Patent Index™, and Thomson Innovation®, the IP intelligence and collaboration platform, were utilized in our research and analysis. Comparative analysis was done using the Thomson Reuters Eikon platform, the single source for financial professionals to turn information into action.

The criteria for the Top 100 Global Innovator award are:

1. SUCCESS

Patenting an invention through one or more patent offices is expensive. Not all patent applications pass through the examination process and are granted. The success metric measures the ratio of published applications (those patents which are filed and publicly published by the patent office but not yet granted) to granted patents over the most recent three years.

2. GLOBAL

Protecting an invention in major world markets is an indication of the significant value a company places on its intellectual property. The number of “innovative” patents that have quadrilateral patents in their patent families, according to the Thomson Reuters Quadrilateral Patent Index, was calculated to create a ratio that shows which companies place a high value on their portfolios in major world markets. The quadrilateral patent authorities is comprised of the Chinese Patent Office, the European Patent Office, the Japanese Patent Office and the United States Patent and Trademark Office.

3. INFLUENCE

The impact of an invention “down the line” can be determined by looking at how often it is subsequently cited by other companies in their inventions. Through the Thomson Reuters Docket Watch® Citation Index database, we counted citations to each organization’s patents over the most recent five years, excluding self-citations, and put a weighted value on this measurement of ICRs.

4. VOLUME

This award focuses on companies that are responsible for generating a sizeable amount of innovation. All organizations with 100 or more “innovative” patents from the most recent three years were included in our analysis. An “innovative” patent is defined as the first publication in a patent document of a new technology, drug, business process, etc. In DWPI, these are called “basic” patents. DWPI provides a record of patents published by nearly 50 patent issuing authorities worldwide to create a comprehensive picture of the innovation landscape. Subsequent filings for the same invention are recorded as “improvements” in DWPI and called out in “patent families” and, for this analysis, were not included.

“Innovation is the primary source of economic growth, job creation and competitiveness in today’s global economy. An efficiently operating intellectual property system is critical to our ability to spur innovation and bring new services and products to the marketplace faster.”
