The Car Worker ,1903 Egalitarian Rights Recognition Matt Hann,2016-08-30 This book takes a distinctive and innovative approach to a relatively under explored question namely Why do we have human rights Much political discourse simply proceeds from the idea that humans have rights because they are human without seriously interrogating this notion Egalitarian Rights Recognition offers an account of how human rights are created and how they may be seen to be legitimate rights are created through social recognition By combining readings of 19th Century English philosopher T H Green with 20th Century political theorist Hannah Arendt the author constructs a new theory of the social recognition of rights He challenges both the standard natural rights approach and also the main accounts of the social recognition of rights which tend to portray social recognition as settled norms or established ways of acting In contrast Hann puts forward a 10 point account of the dynamic and contingent social recognition of human rights which emphasises the importance of meaningful socio economic equality
