Bibliography on Seed Morphology Hans Arne Jensen, 1998-06-01. Seeds are a vital part of life on earth. They are fundamental for plant reproduction and many seeds play an important role in the diet of man and domestic and wild animals. Knowledge of the appearance of seeds, seed morphology, is of great importance to botany and seed identification in relation to seed setting, quarantine work, forensic work, seed poisoning studies, seed dispersal, seed banks, and archaeological studies. This bibliography contains 3775 references and is divided in two parts: handbooks and articles and monographs. In the latter, the bibliographical reference is supplemented by information of importance to seed identification: genera mentioned in articles, keys, descriptions, drawings, photograph scanning electron micrographs, anatomy, and chemical methods. The index of authors contains the names of an extensive number of authors cited in the bibliography and in the index of genera; more than 3900 genera described in one or more of the publications are cited. Agriculture Handbook, 2008-07. Yam Bean:
