Assessment Issues in Child Neuropsychology Michael G. Tramontana,Stephen R. Hooper,2013-11-21 Neuropsychology has its roots in clinical neurology Reading case de scriptions by 19th century neurologists such as Wernicke s painstakingly detailed examinations of patients with the aphasic symptom complex makes it obvious that neuropsychology is not a new discipline Even the marriage with psychology is not new the neurologist Arnold

Pick for example was fully conversant with the developments in contemporary psychological as well as linguistic research. However the primary focus of 19th and early 20th century psychology was on general psychology and only a small number of psychologists ventured into what then was called differential psychology the psychology of individual differences including a few who became attached to neurological research and rehabilitation units after World War I. It remained until World War II for psychologists to establish a more solid working relationship with neurology. What psychology had to offer to neurology was its experimental skill the development of a sophisticated methodology and for clinical work the development of psychometrics. On the whole the marriage between the two disciplines has been fruitful leading to new insights models and discoveries about brain behavior relationships documented in several textbooks which appeared in rapid succession since the 1960s. In clinical practice neuropsychology has been inventive in some respects in others merely introducing psychometric rigor to already existing neurological examinations. As described in greater detail in this book developmental neuropsychology is of even more recent origin.

Assessment of Young Developmentally Disabled Children Theodore D. Wachs, Robert Sheehan, 2013-06-29 Our knowledge of the cognitive and social emotional functioning of developmentally disabled infants and preschoolers derives in large part from our assessment of such children. This book has been developed to familiarize readers with the characteristics of developmentally disabled children and to introduce to readers aspects of measurement that are of relevance to the assessment of atypical infants and preschoolers. The book has been developed with clinicians and prospective clinicians in mind. These are individuals who are committed to the care and education of developmentally disabled infants and preschoolers and the families of those children. The book has thus been written to provide support for the use of assessment data in planning early intervention programs. Of special note in the development of this edited book is that it is divided into four major parts with interrelated chapters in each part. The authors of chapters in Parts II and III had access to the chapters in Part I before writing their chapters. The summary chapters found in Part IV were similarly written by authors having access to all chapters in Parts I-III. This approach to the development of an edited book was chosen as a way of ensuring an integration of major concepts throughout the book. This process is also a reflection of our belief that assessment is an interdisciplinary process involving the synthesis of a number of diverse interests.

Cultural Encounters in Translated Children's Literature Helen Frank, 2014-04-08 Cultural Encounters in Translated Children's Literature offers a detailed and innovative model of analysis for examining the complexities of translating children's literature and sheds light on the interpretive choices at work in moving texts from one culture to another The core of the study addresses the issue of how images of a nation locale or country are constructed in translated children's literature with the translation of Australian children's fiction into French serving as a case study Issues examined include the selection of books for translation the relationship between children's books and the national and international publishing industry the packaging of translations and the importance of titles blurbs and covers the linguistic and stylistic features specific to translating for children intertextual references the function of the translation in the target culture didactic and pedagogical aims euphemistic language and explicitation and literariness in translated texts The findings of the case study suggest that the most common constructs of Australia in French translations reveal a preponderance of traditional Eurocentric signifiers that identify Australia with the outback the antipodes the exotic the wild the unknown the void the end of the world the young and innocent nation and the Far West Contemporary signifiers that construct Australia as urban multicultural Aboriginal worldly and inharmonious are seriously under represented The study also shows that French translations are conventional conservative and didactic showing preference for an exotic rather than local specificity with systematic manipulation of Australian referents betraying a perception of Australia as antipodean rural exoticism The significance of the study lies in underscoring the manner in which a given culture is constructed in another cultural milieu especially through translated children's literature
