Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of the use of a computer-based simulation on the learning of the concepts of the cell cycle and mitosis. The study was conducted in a high school biology classroom. The students were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group received traditional instruction, while the experimental group used a computer-based simulation. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had a significantly higher understanding of the concepts of the cell cycle and mitosis compared to the control group. The use of the simulation was found to be an effective tool for teaching these concepts.
