century became synonymous with the hack writing that pervades Gissing's novel. The novel contrasts Edwin Reardon, a congenitally uncommercial but talented writer, against Jasper Milvain, a selfish and unscrupulous hack who rejects artistic endeavour for material gain. The novel suggests that the literary world rewards materialistic self-promotion more than serious artistic sensibility.

New Grub Street, a Novel (1891), by George Gissing, Complete Volume 1, 2 And 3

George Gissing, 2016-05-02

New Grub Street is a novel by George Gissing published in 1891 which is set in the literary and journalistic circles of 1880s London. Gissing revised and shortened the novel for a French edition of 1901. The story deals with the literary world that Gissing himself had experienced. Its title refers to the London street Grub Street, which in the 18th century became synonymous with hack literature by Gissing's time. Grub Street itself no longer existed, though hack writing certainly did. Its two central characters are a sharply contrasted pair of writers: Edwin Reardon, a novelist of some talent but limited commercial prospects and a shy cerebral man; and Jasper Milvain, a young journalist, hard working and capable of generosity but cynical and only semi-scrupulous about writing and its purpose in the modern, i.e. late Victorian world.

New Grub Street opens with Milvain, an alarmingly modern young man driven by pure financial ambition in navigating his literary career. He accepts that he will always despise the people he writes for, networks within the appropriate social circle to create opportunity, and authors articles for popular periodicals. Reardon, on the other hand, prefers to write novels of a more literary bent and refuses to pander to contemporary tastes until, as a last gasp measure against financial ruin, he attempts a popular novel. At this venture, he is of course too good to succeed, and he is driven to separate from his wife Amy Reardon née Yule, who cannot accept her husband's inflexibly high standards and consequent poverty.

The Yule family includes Amy's two uncles: John, a wealthy invalid, and Alfred, a species of critic, and Alfred's daughter and research assistant, Marian. The friendship that develops between Marian and Milvain's sisters, who move to London following their mother's death, provides opportunity for the former to meet and fall in love with Milvain. However, much Milvain respects Marian's intellectual capabilities and strength of personality, the crucial element, according to him, for marriage is missing: money. Marrying a rich woman, after all, is the most convenient way to speed his career. Indeed, Milvain slights romantic love as a key to marriage. As a rule, marriage is the result of a mild preference encouraged by circumstances and deliberately heightened into strong sexual feeling. You, of all men, know well enough that the same kind of feeling could be produced for almost any woman who wasn't repulsive.

Eventually, reason enough for an engagement is provided by a legacy of 5,000 left to Marian by John Yule. Life and death eventually end the possibility of this union. Milvain's initial career advancement is a position on The Current, a paper edited by Clement Fudge. Twenty years earlier, Alfred Yule, Marian's father, was slighted by Fudge in a newspaper article, and the resulting acerbic resentment extends even to Milvain. Alfred refuses to countenance Marian's marriage, but his objection proves to be an obstacle to Milvain only after Yule's eyesight fails and Marian's legacy is reduced to a mere 1,500. As a result, Marian must work to provide for her parent, and her inheritance is no longer available to Milvain. By this time, Milvain already has detected a more desirable target for marriage Amy Reardon Reardon's poverty and natural disposition toward ill health culminate in his death following a brief reconciliation with his wife She besides the receipt of 10 000 upon John Yule's death has the natural beauty and grace to benefit a man in the social events beneficial to his career Eventually Amy and Milvain marry however as the narrator reveals this marriage motivated by circumstances is not lacking in more profound areas
