Moore,2009-07-15 From components of successful PR programs to evaluation guidelines this valuable resource gives educational leaders the public relations support needed to meet tough communication demands and ensure student success Looking Inward Kelly A. Campbell,2018 There has been a decline in public good will toward institutions of higher education for nearly four decades Resultantly the public media and politicians call for greater transparency It would be beneficial for institutions of higher education to utilize strategic means to communicate their stories successes and brand directly to various publics A critical albeit often an overlooked public are the employees of the university They can serve as ambassadors for the university interacting with outside publics In this capacity not only do employees need to know information about their organization to function well at their positions they also need to understand the strategic direction of the organization Strategic communication of this nature can be accomplished with them via internal communication and that falls under the domain of the public relations entity on campus This study seeks to examine how senior level public relations practitioners in higher education develop and carry out their internal communication responsibilities to employees Understanding was sought regarding the practitioners beliefs and practices regarding a public relations as a strategic management function b the role of relationship management within public relations and c whether symmetrical communication is used for cultivating relationships while maintaining a feedback mechanism to adjust public relations strategies based on publics and environment This study also looked at common and unique elements of practice how higher education public relations practitioners define best practices and whether they coordinate internal communication with other entities within their college or university and analyzes some demographic data regarding the career paths and education of the practitioners It concludes that while the participants in the study were operating with direct reporting to the president of their respective universities and that all participants demonstrated working in a strategic capacity none had documented communication processes with respect to internal audiences and few had formal methods in place to evaluate the success of their efforts In addition none had well formulated and strategic processes in place with respect to whether symmetrical communication is used for cultivating relationships while maintaining a feedback mechanism to adjust public relations strategies based on publics and environment The University and Its Publics Clay Schoenfeld,1954 The Organization of Public Relations in American Colleges and Universities American College Public Relations Association,1953 The Role of Communication Messages and Public

Relations Strategies in the Higher Education "public Good" Debate Terry Angelo Wilson, 2009 This study examined the role and function of public relations in public higher education institutions by focusing on the messages being communicated by four public research oriented universities This study was designed to determine if and how these universities communicate their public good responsibility and how that communication is perceived by two constituent groups higher education reporters and state legislators The researcher used two qualitative methods thematic analysis and in depth elite interviews Thematic analysis was used to analyze the universities mission and vision statements strategic plans legislative appropriations requests presidential speeches and 800 press releases 200 from each of four universities to determine whether references to the public good were either present or absent in messages the universities disseminated during 2006 and 2007 In depth elite interviews were used to obtain the perspectives of the chief public relations officers at each of the four public research oriented universities about their public relations strategies and communication goals Higher education reporters covering these respective institutions and members of the legislature in positions of leadership on committees involved with higher education policy and funding issues were also interviewed to understand their perceptions about the universities This study found the following 24 references to public good the core concepts of research teaching and public service the benefits the universities create as engines of economic development diversity the recruitment and retention of faculty the university as a center for arts entertainment and cultural events faculty and student achievement student career enhancement and institutional prestige among others The study demonstrated that public research oriented universities are using public relations strategies and techniques to construct and distribute messages to their key constituents about the benefits they provide to the State and its citizens Major findings also include the observation that higher education reporters cover higher education as a statewide beat which focuses on the state s two flagship or Tier 1 universities the University of Texas at Austin and Texas A M University and the institutions in the reporters respective cities In addition the higher education reporters write about issues related to higher education rather than institutions per se The study also found that State Legislators only recognize the two Tier 1 institutions as research institutions and their perspectives about these institutions are driven by how these universities are funded
