Individual Criminal Responsibility for Core International Crimes Ciara Damgaard, 2008-08-02 1 1 Opening Remarks and Objectives Crimes against international law are committed by men not by abstract entities and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law 2 be enforced This is perhaps the most renowned citation from the judgment of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg IMT In the six decades which have passed since the IMT judgment was handed down the recognition of the concept of individual criminal responsibility for core international crimes has been significantly reinforced and developed particularly since the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia ICTY and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda ICTR in the 1990 s and most recently the International Criminal Court ICC The media has of course played a crucial role in increasing awareness of this concept especially amongst the general populace Indeed the concept has arguably a much higher profile today than ever before in its history However the concept of individual criminal responsibility for core international crimes is neither as straightforward nor as single faceted as might appear on first glance While the general principle behind the concept does not generate too many difficulties it is in its practical application that the more challenging aspects of the concept are brought to the fore Each of these challenging aspects can also be described as a pertinent issue of the concept of individual criminal responsibility for core enterprises In this book John Zinkin and Chris Bennett argue that defining a crime is a contested issue and that criminality can be viewed as a spectrum comprising a range of different types of crimes the harms caused and the variety of punishments involved They discuss the critical role of the state in determining where criminality is perceived to sit on the crime continuum The authors delve into how the state and organized crime are natural competitors and how organized crime and legitimate businesses are subject to many of the same internal and external strategic considerations They contend that the resulting similarities between criminality in organized criminal organizations and legitimate businesses are greater than the differences and that the differences are only in degree and not in kind This thought provoking study of criminality will be of immense interest to professionals coaches consultants and academics interested in the techniques and ethics of leadership The book is in effect the result of an intellectual journey of the authors from the ideas presented in their earlier book The Principles and Practice of Effective Leadership to the issues in this book discussing important difficult and contested subjects The journey continues in their third book The Challenge in Leading Ethical and Successful Organizations
