1. The speaker's main comparison between students and workers was to prove the point that only one of the two groups is really working hard.
2. They are able to do this because of the contrast between the two groups. The students are able to relax and study only one hour a day, while the workers are forced to work long hours every day. The speaker also uses the contrast between the two groups to prove that the workers are the ones who are really working hard.
