Robert Boyer, Elsie Charron, Ulrich Jurgens, Steven Tolliday, 1998-11-19 Recent years have seen intense debates among management and academics on the rise of lean production and Japanization. Some authors have stressed the universal impact of new forms of work organization and best practice while others have questioned the limits of convergence, stressed the weight of national contexts or societal effects or highlighted the evolutionary effects of unpredictability in the external environment. The international automobile industry has been a focus for much of this debate and this book, written by a team of leading international researchers in the field, uses this industry to examine in detail the actual practice of the transfer and adaptation of productive models and the trajectories of innovation, compromise and failure that can result. Case studies cover in detail the Japanese transplant experience in North America and the global experience of hybrid production systems in Europe, Latin America and Asia. The book contributes to theoretical discussions about the transfer, adaptation or convergence of productive models. In particular, the authors argue that direct transplantation or imitation of these models is rarely feasible or even desirable. Systems cannot be transferred without being significantly reshaped. Instead, the book focuses on the process of hybridization, the complex interaction of productive models with national and societal effects. Hybridization, it is argued, is inevitable. But this should be seen not simply as a process of compromise and retreat but also as an important dynamic of innovation and learning. This book is from the French-based international research network GERPISA (Groupe d'étude de recherche permanente sur l'industrie et les salaires de l'automobile). See related titles below. Alejandro Portes, Carlos Dore y Cabral, Patricia Landolt, 1997-06-03 A study of urbanization in five countries: Costa Rica, Haiti, Guatemala, the Dominican Republic and Jamaica during the 1980s and 1990s when the region's economy shifted from one heavily dependent on imports to one directed more to producing exports. The Urban Caribbean studies urbanization in five countries: Costa Rica, Haiti, Guatemala, the Dominican Republic and Jamaica during the 1980s and 1990s when the region's economy shifted from one heavily dependent on imports to one directed more to producing exports. This shift caused producers and entrepreneurs to rely more on microenterprises, thus challenging the informal economy networks of the central cities. Sociologist Alejandro Portes and the other contributors use rich in-depth data to examine both qualitative and quantitative changes in these five countries. Their research method allows them to make generalizations applicable to all five economies while retaining the concreteness of the similarities and differences that make each country unique. This volume is an incentive to other collaborative efforts to chart the paths taken by the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean as they seek to accommodate to the new global political and economic context. The message of the volume is a convincing one. Because of similarities in the trends affecting countries of the region and policy debates, each country can benefit from the experiences of the others. However, the differences in political structure and in the nature of citizenship mean that social and economic policy debates must take into account the national context. Foreword by Bryan Roberts, University of Texas at Austin. The Assumptions Economists Make Jonathan Schlefer, 2012-03-20 Economists make confident assertions in op ed columns and on cable news so why are their explanations at odds with equally confident assertions from other economists And why are all economic predictions so rarely borne out Harnessing his frustration with this contradiction Schlefer set out to investigate how economists arrive at their opinions
