

The Promise of Performance Assessments: Innovations in High School Learning and College Admission

Roneeta Guha, Tony Wagner, Linda Darling-Hammond, Terri Taylor, and Diane Curtis

Abstract

The report on which this brief is based describes performance assessments and their value for guiding and evaluating high school students' learning, as well as informing colleges and universities about what students know and can do. It explores state and local policies that support the use of such assessments, along with emerging higher education efforts to incorporate them in college admission, placement, and advising. It discusses steps that can help ensure that performance assessments are high-quality, rigorous, and well understood and that can facilitate the use of these assessments in higher education decisions.

The full report can be found online at <https://learningpolicyinstitute.org/product/promise-performance-assessments>.

Funders

Core operating support for the Learning Policy Institute is provided by the Sandier Foundation, the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, and the Ford Foundation.

If ever the time was ripe for colleges to consider admission criteria that measure deep learning and its application to real-world problems, it is now. Policymakers, educators, and business leaders have emphasized the need for instruction and assessments that reflect the complex thinking and performance that are necessary in today's world. A 2015 survey of employers by the Association of American Colleges and Universities noted that:

When it comes to the types of skills and knowledge that employers feel are most important to workplace success, large majorities of employers do NOT feel that recent college graduates are well prepared. This is particularly the case for applying knowledge and skills in real-world settings, critical thinking skills, and written and oral communication skills.¹

Meanwhile, more than 900 4-year colleges and universities—believing that current tests do not sufficiently reflect these skills—have made scores from tests like the SAT and ACT optional while emphasizing the importance of essays and other work samples, plus high school classroom performance.² And research has shown that authentic measures of student work—from high school grade point average (GPA) and/or class rank to the SAT II writing test—are stronger predictors of college success than multiple-choice measures.³ A recent study of 33 “test optional” colleges found that student outcomes were not undermined by the policy: college GPAs were best predicted by high school GPAs, despite wide variations in students’ test scores.⁴

Several consortia of colleges have emerged to encourage and help develop new methods of recognizing student accomplishments. At the same time, a number of states, districts, and networks of public and private high schools have begun to identify competencies associated with college, career, and civic readiness that they evaluate with performance assessments, which are often assembled into a graduation portfolio that documents students’ accomplishments in authentic ways. As doctoral students do with dissertations, students often defend their projects and papers before panels of judges, who rigorously evaluate them against high standards; students revise their work until they meet the standards. Educators engaged in this work believe that such performance assessments provide a more holistic and accurate view of students’ mastery of critical skills while better preparing them to engage in college-level work.

The Asian American Achievement Paradox Jennifer Lee, Min Zhou, 2015-06-30 Asian Americans are often stereotyped as the model minority Their sizeable presence at elite universities and high household incomes have helped construct the narrative of Asian American exceptionalism While many scholars and activists characterize this as a myth pundits claim that Asian Americans educational attainment is the result of unique cultural values In The Asian American Achievement Paradox sociologists Jennifer Lee and Min Zhou offer a compelling account of the academic achievement of the children of Asian immigrants Drawing on in depth interviews with the adult children of Chinese immigrants and Vietnamese refugees and survey data Lee and Zhou bridge sociology and social psychology to explain how immigration laws institutions and culture interact to foster high achievement among certain Asian American groups For the Chinese and Vietnamese in Los Angeles Lee and Zhou find that the educational attainment of the second generation is strikingly similar despite the vastly different socioeconomic profiles of their immigrant parents Because immigration policies after 1965 favor individuals with higher levels of education and professional skills many Asian immigrants are highly educated when they arrive in the United States They bring a specific success frame which is strictly defined as earning a degree from an elite university and working in a high status field This success frame is reinforced in many local Asian communities which make resources such as college preparation courses and tutoring available to group members including their low income members While the success frame accounts for part of Asian Americans high rates of achievement Lee and Zhou also find that institutions such as public schools are crucial in supporting the cycle of Asian American achievement Teachers and guidance counselors for example who presume that Asian American students are smart disciplined and studious provide them with extra help and steer them toward competitive academic programs These institutional advantages in turn lead to better academic performance and outcomes among Asian American students Yet the expectations of high achievement come with a cost the notion of Asian American success creates an achievement paradox in which Asian Americans who do not fit the success frame feel like failures or racial outliers While pundits ascribe Asian American success to the assumed superior traits intrinsic to Asian culture Lee and Zhou show how historical cultural and institutional elements work together to confer advantages to specific populations An insightful counter to notions of culture based on stereotypes The Asian American Achievement Paradox offers
