Advances in Research on Vegetable Production Under a Changing Climate Vol. 2 Shashank Shekhar Solankey, Meenakshi Kumari, 2023-01-01 This second volume on the topic will be extremely useful for the researchers and postgraduate students working on vegetable crops with a special focus on climate change Today the entire world is suffering from global warming and its consequent climate change This has emerged as the most prominent global environmental issue and there is an urgent need to mitigate its impact on agriculture Over the past 20 years South Asia has had a robust economic growth yet it is home to more than one fourth of the world's hunger and 40% of the world's malnourished children and women Persistent climatic variability which results in frequent drought and flood is among the major reasons for this phenomenon Vegetables are in general more succulent have 90% water and more sensitive to climatic vagaries and sudden changes in temperature as well as irregular precipitation at any phase of crop growing can affect the normal growth flowering pollination fruit setting fruit development and fruit ripening which eventually decreases the yield The irregular precipitation also causes the soil salinity and is a major challenge in many vegetable growing areas To mitigate the harmful impact of climatic change there is an urgent need to develop adequate adaptation strategies for adverse effect of climate change and preference should be given to the development of heat cold drought flood and salinity stress tolerant genotypes along with climate proofing through conventional and non conventional breeding techniques as well as exploiting the beneficial effects of CO2 enhancement on crop growth and yield Available evidence shows that there is high probability of increase in the frequency and intensity of climate related natural hazards due to climate change and hence increase the potential threat due to climate change related natural disasters in the world At present protected cultivation and grafted seedlings are also popularizing among vegetable growers because of the huge scope as well as molecular breeding emerging insect pests diseases and postharvest quality of vegetables under this climate change scenario Moreover underexploited vegetables perennial vegetable and tuber crops have a more tolerant ability to climate vagaries compare to major vegetables which are also discussed in this book
