The truth is that mass demonstrations are rehearsals for revolution: not strategic or even tactical ones, but rehearsals of revolutionary awareness. The delay between the rehearsals and the real performance may be very long; their quality – the intensity of rehearsed awareness – may, on different occasions, vary considerably ...

A demonstration, however much spontaneity it may contain, is a created event which arbitrarily separates itself from ordinary life ... therein lies its prophetic rehearsing possibilities. – John Berger, 'The Nature of Mass Demonstrations', in New Society, 23 May 1963.
