

Language and Ethnicity

- 'Language, politics and power intersect on a multitude of levels, and analysis of language in the context of ethnicity and race allows for this relationship to be made explicit.' (Price, 2004)
- On an individual level: language is 'a powerful tool in the display of ethnic self' (Bucholtz, 1995:357)
- On a group level: language 'the very emblem of the existence of that community.'
- Sometimes, people learn the language of their heritage in order to achieve ethnic authenticity through language' (Bucholtz 1995:362)
- People often assume a link between ethnicity (race?) and language, particularly in situations where two or three ethnic groups are polarised (e.g. 'White' / 'Chinese' / 'Black' in Taiwan)
- 'White' = are expected to speak / be able to teach English (even if e.g. Spanish)
- Often expected to be 'genetically' unable to understand Chinese (!)
- 'Black' = expected not to speak English well enough to teach
- Even sociolinguists sometimes make this one-to-one connection: e.g. Black British English, African-American Vernacular English
