Ageing and Their Relationship with the Development of Disability, Iatrogenic Illness and Geriatric Syndromes Patrick Kimuyu, 2018-02-15 Seminar paper from the year 2018 in the subject Medicine Anatomy Physiology Cytology grade 1 Egerton University language English abstract Over the past decades scientific inquiry into the phenomenon of aging has produced extensive literature Of great fascination is the mechanism that underlies aging process From a biological perspective aging takes a life course when an individual grows to maturity During this phase in life aging is not felt as a remarkable biological course due to the excitement that occurs during young age However the ageing coincides with explicit biological changes especially the aspect of physical decline It is this phase of ageing that has attracted the interests of both scientists and gerontologists Scientists are focused on understanding the biology of aging Biological studies indicate that ageing involves biological pathways such as the regulation of genes metabolism and cellular signaling Lopez et al 2013 Newgard Pessin 2014 These pathways play integral roles in controlling how the human body works including response to infection stress as well as recovery from injuries On the other hand gerontologists are concerned with the aspects of aging in order to distinguish normal aging from disease The task here involves establishing a clear boundary between normal aging and age related health problems which have for long been considered as part of aging For instance the association of change in personality especially during old age has been found to be an independent construct that does not have a significant relationship with normal ageing National Institute of Health 2015 In this respect this paper provides a critical discussion on aspects of normal ageing when combined with a chronic disease may contribute to the development of disability iatrogenic illness and geriatric syndromes as well as elucidating the nurse's role in limiting this risk This topic has immense implications to clinical practice Foremost ageing is associated with chronic illnesses Additionally some aspects of ageing exhibit interplay with chronic illnesses to cause devastating health consequences such as disability iatrogenic illness and geriatric syndromes Therefore nursing care should focus on addressing chronic illnesses as well as preventing the development of disability iatrogenic illness and geriatric syndromes As such this essay discusses how the combination of normal ageing aspects with chronic illnesses may lead to these adverse health conditions using the case of diabetes Adult Physical Conditions Amy J Mahle, Amber L Ward, 2018-04-17 The go to text reference for class clinical and practice A who's who of experts and educators brings you practical in depth coverage of the most common adult conditions and the corresponding evidence based occupational therapy interventions Written for OTAs to meet their unique needs this approach combines theory with the practical evidence based functional content that develops the critical thinking and clinical reasoning skills that are the foundation for professional knowledgeable creative and competent practice Perspectives On Loss John H. Harvey, 2014-01-14 Losses are integral to the human experience but they sometimes unfold in subtle ways Loss is not just about death but can encompass a number of situations such as those gradual losses experienced by the elderly loss of vision mental capacity or hope Intended to stimulate ideas and research in the new area of psychological aspects of loss this sourcebook collects the writing of a set of distinguished scholars representing psychology and related fields The author presents a case for a broadly construed field of loss both personal and interpersonal that would complement other fields such as death and dying traumatology and stress and coping No other volume is as comprehensive in its treatment of this intriguing subject The book begins with an introduction to the concept of loss and discusses the definition of the term and the salience of the topic in the general public in the 1990s Contributors were chosen to represent some of the most interesting current work on different types of loss and adaptation in the whole of the social and behavioral sciences Contents cover such diverse subjects as loss in intimate relationships disability chronic illness genocide sports unemployment and homelessness The book concludes with a commentary section on loss theory and research Arnold and Boggs's
