El Mirón Cave, Cantabrian Spain Lawrence Guy Straus, Manuel R. González González Morales, 2012-04-16 Though known as a site since 1903 El Mirón Cave in the Cantabrian Mountains of northern Spain remained unexcavated until a team from the universities of New Mexico and Cantabria began ongoing excavations in 1996 This large deeply stratified cave allowed the team to apply cutting edge techniques of excavation recording and multidisciplinary analysis in the meticulous study of a site that has become a new reference sequence for the classic Cantabrian region The excavations uncovered the long history of human occupation of the cave extending from the end of the Middle Paleolithic through the Upper Paleolithic up to the modern era This volume comprehensively describes the background information on the setting the site the chronology and the sedimentology It then focuses on the biological and archaeological records of the Holocene levels pertaining to Mesolithic Neolithic Chalcolithic and Bronze Age Archaeologists anthropologists and historians will be drawn to this study and its extensive findings dated by some seventy five radiocarbon assays

BOOK JACKET

Holocene Extinctions Samuel T. Turvey, 2009-05-28 The extent to which human activity has influenced species extinctions during the recent prehistoric past remains controversial due to other factors such as climatic fluctuations and a general lack of data However the Holocene the geological interval spanning the last 11 500 years from the end of the last glaciation has witnessed massive levels of extinctions that have continued into the modern historical era but in a context of only relatively minor climatic fluctuations This makes a detailed consideration of these extinctions a useful system for investigating the impacts of human activity over time Holocene Extinctions describes and analyses the range of global extinction events which have occurred during this key time period as well as their relationship to both earlier and ongoing species losses By integrating information from fields as diverse as zoology ecology palaeontology archaeology and geography and by incorporating data from a broad range of taxonomic groups and ecosystems this novel text provides a fascinating insight into human impacts on global extinction rates both past and present This truly interdisciplinary book is suitable for both graduate students and researchers in these varied fields It will also be of value and use to policy makers and conservation professionals since it provides valuable guidance on how to apply lessons from the past to prevent future biodiversity loss and inform modern conservation planning
