

may need about the other religion are easily accessible on the internet. It is also easy for people to discuss issues about religion in the social media platforms, making it possible to address myths and misconceptions associated with a given religious group.

Globalization is another major influential factor that is shaping the future of religion in America. Technological advancement in the field of transport and communication is transforming the world into a small global village (Berger, 2006). Geographical barriers to movement that existed before have been eliminated. The result is increased interaction among people of different religious beliefs. In the recent past, the United States has experienced an increased number of Muslims from the Arab world immigrating into the country. They get to interact with Christians and people of other faiths and some of them get converted. Sometimes it is these immigrants who get converted into Christianity after interacting with Christians in the country.

The emergence of mega-churches in America has a major impact on the future of religion in this country. A new trend that started about three centuries ago where large churches are constructed to accommodate a large congregation is increasingly getting popular. In 1990, it was estimated that there were only 350 mega-churches in the United States. This number has grown to over 1600 today, and the trend shows that more is yet to come up.

A section of the society now prefers attending megachurches because they believe they have better forums where they can get support, especially when they are facing personal challenges in life. They get to meet different people that may help them in different ways to overcome issues they are struggling with within their social, economic, and political lives. Some people are drawn to Christianity because of the beauty of these mega-churches. They go to these churches, not only to get spiritual nourishment but also to get entertained.

Additional Factors That Influence the Future of Religion in America

A number of factors, other than the ones discussed in the section above, also have significant impacts on the future of religion in the United States. One good example is the emergence of sectarian violence. Most of the terror groups such as ISIS and Al Qaeda draw their inspiration from Islamic teachings (Hout, Fischer, & Chaves, 2013). They justify their attacks using the message in the Quran. A section of the society in America today associated Islam with terrorism.

Islam is seen as a religion for rebellious movements and people who are not satisfied with the current regimes. This did not start in modern society. In fact, Islam
