Farm Life; ,1909      The Reader ,1907      Shehens Houn Dogs Elia Wilkinson Peattie,2004-06-01 I believe yo all ah a damned revinoor aftah all said Shehen He did not raise his voice but he spoke between closed teeth His blue gray eyes had become like points of steel Berenson equally tall in his dark city clothes his inappropriate derby above his long office bleached face looked Shehen squarely in the eye      What's in the Magazines ,1907      Selected Works of Elia Wilkinson Peattie Elia Wilkinson Peattie,2020-09-28 ONE who enters Chicago unacquainted with it having no open sesame to its hospitable doors knowing the city only by its streets its hotels and its theatres is disturbed by an unpleasant emotion If he comes from some well regulated cultivated and placid town of the eastern part of this country or from England or Germany he feels shaken out of poise and peace by a tremendous discord He sees a city ankle deep in dirt swathed in smoke wild with noise and frantic with the stress of life He sees confusion rampant and the fret and fume of the town rise and brood above it like hideous Afrits But as time goes on and even supposing the man continues to remain a stranger among the two millions of his fellow men who make up the city he experiences a change of sentiment He ceases to be shocked and becomes interested It occurs to him that if commerce is ever epic it is so here He feels the beat of the city like the vibration of mighty drums and the thing he thought a discord he discovers to be the rhythm of great movements The drab sky the dirty streets the dusky air the dark clothed figures of the people are all in harmony and it seems dramatically fitting that a city in the throes of its toil should wear its working clothes It is grimy with its labor and breathless and noisy forging its Balmung with mighty shouts He who comes to Chicago to seek his fortune possessing delicate traditions having been brought up among persons of similar traditions is confused and angered by the treatment he receives He discovers that he must be successful if he would be noticed that he must be in need if he would be helped But if he makes his way in law abiding frugal and lonely fashion he will attract no attention And first and last in poverty and in riches in sickness and in health the town will roar at him if he is afraid it will roar twice as loud as it did before Its furnaces and forges its cable systems and syndicates its slaughterhouses and wheatpits its railroads and elevators its greedy breadwinners and greedy millionaires and the boats upon its filthy river will all roar So inevitably at last in a puny way he will roar back He will say Chicago has no peace no leisure no aspirations save those of a materialistic sort no religion no refinement Sometimes even after he has found he is mistaken in saying these things he will go on saying them because he cannot forgive Chicago for enticing him with her commercial allurements away from the home of his youth and the things to which he was born He lays to her account all the pangs of homesickness which he suffers and he misrepresents her as it is the fate of new cities to be misrepresented      The American Stationer ,1907
