Looking For Carrascolendas From A Childs World To Award Winning Television:

Looking for Carrascolendas Aida Barrera, 2010-07-22 If your childhood friends were Agapito the bombastic bilingual lion Campamocha the fix it man Caracoles the restaurant owner Uncle Andy the shoe seller Berta and Dyana the life size dolls and Se orita Barrera then you grew up watching Carrascolendas This award winning show which originally aired on PBS in the 1970s and was subsequently broadcasted throughout the country in the 1980s and 1990s was the first Spanish and English children s educational television program broadcast to national audiences in the United States In this engagingly written memoir creator producer Aida Barrera describes how the mythical world of Carrascolendas grew out of her real life experiences as a Mexican American child growing up in the Valley of South Texas She recalls how she drew on those early experiences to create television programming that specifically addressed the needs of Hispanic children even as it remained accessible and entertaining to children of other cultural backgrounds In addition to her personal story Barrera recounts the long term struggles for network acceptance and funding that made the production of Carrascolendas something of a miracle This off camera story adds an important chapter to the history of Anglo Mexican cultural politics during the 1970s Given the fact that Latino characters are still under and stereotypically represented on network television Carrascolendas remains an important reminder of what is possible and what has been lost in authentically multicultural television programming

Schools and Screens Victoria Cain, 2024-02-06 Why screens in schools from film screenings to instructional television to personal computers did not bring about the educational revolution promised by reformers Long before Chromebook giveaways and remote learning screen media technologies were enthusiastically promoted by American education reformers Again and again as schools deployed film screenings television programs and computer games screen based learning was touted as a cure for all educational ills But the transformation promised by advocates for screens in schools never happened In this book Victoria Cain chronicles important episodes in the history of educational technology as reformers technocrats public television producers and computer scientists tried to harness the power of screen based media to shape successive generations of students Cain describes how beginning in the 1930s champions of educational technology saw screens in schools as essential tools for training citizens and presented films to that end Among the films screened for educational purposes was the notoriously racist Birth of a Nation In the 1950s and 1960s both technocrats and leftist educators turned to screens to prepare young Americans for Cold War citizenship and from the 1970s through the 1990s as commercial television and personal computers arrived in classrooms screens in schools represented an increasingly privatized vision of schooling and civic engagement Cain argues that the story of screens in schools is not simply about efforts to develop the right technological tools rather it reflects ongoing tensions over citizenship racial politics private funding and distrust of teachers Ultimately she shows that the technologies that reformers had envisioned as improving education and training students in civic participation in fact deepened educational inequities
