Memories of a Holocaust Survivor - Irving Farber Howard Farber, 2003-10-31 From my earliest childhood memories I recall my dad speaking about his experiences in the holocaust When he started talking about it which wasn't often you just listened You'd occasionally hear him screaming in his sleep reliving the nightmare of the holocaust As I heard his stories they were disconnected with no organized chronology Most of the time you had very little idea as to when a particular story took place and even my father was fuzzy on the timeframe When I was about thirteen an event occurred that imprinted itself indelibly in my mind While shopping with his family in downtown Brooklyn my father encountered a man who had been a kapo guard at one of the slave labor camps where he had been interned I can still see the confrontation which is described in the book as clearly as if it happened yesterday When my father neared eighty I realized that all his stories would be lost to future generations when he died and when I died no one in the family would have any knowledge of the suffering he endured I persuaded him to collaborate with me to get his story on paper It took two years and here's the product of our efforts His story is too important for it not to endure and serve as a lesson to future generations What happened to him and the Jewish people must never be allowed to happen again to Jews or any ethnic group Don't ever let it happen again Solo Vocal
