1889

The Toronto Street Railway Company built this three-storey Renaissance Revival-style stable and car barn to designs by architect H. G. Salisbury in order to house its fleet of horse-drawn streetcars. In 1891, when the Toronto Street Railway ceased operating, its successor, the Toronto Railway Company, took over the building and converted it to a steam power plant for the city's first regular electric streetcar service, which began in August 1892. A 76-metre chimney (now demolished) at the rear of the power plant was one of the tallest structures in Toronto in the 1890s. Photographers liked to take pictures of the city from the top of the chimney. In 1921, when the city-owned Toronto Transportation Commission absorbed the Toronto Railway Company, the building became a depot and warehouse. Zeidler Partnership Architects performed an extensive, award-winning renovation of the building for Young People's Theatre in 1977.

Maxwell,2023-05-12 The United States is accustomed to accepting waves of migrants who are fleeing oppressive conditions and political persecution in their home countries But in the 1960s and 1970s the flow of migration reversed as over fifty thousand Americans fled across the border to Canada to resist military service during the Vietnam War or to escape their homeland's hawkish society Unguarded Border tells their stories and in the process describes a migrant experience that does not fit the usual paradigms Rather than treating these American refugees as unwelcome foreigners Canada embraced them refusing to extradite draft resisters or military deserters and not even requiring passports for the border crossing And instead of forming close knit migrant communities most of these migrants sought to integrate themselves within Canadian society Historian Donald W Maxwell explores how these Americans in exile forged cosmopolitan identities coming to regard themselves as global citizens a status complicated by the Canadian government's attempts to claim them and the U S government's eventual efforts to reclaim them Unguarded Border offers a new perspective on a movement that permanently changed perceptions of compulsory military service migration and national identity

Constructing National Identity in Canadian and Australian Classrooms Stephen Jackson,2018-06-06 This book explores the evolution of Canadian and Australian national identities in the era of decolonization by evaluating educational policies in Ontario Canada and Victoria Australia Drawing on sources such as textbooks and curricula the book argues that Britishness a sense of imperial citizenship connecting white Anglo Saxons across the British Empire continued to be a crucial marker of national identity in both Australia and Canada until the late 1960s and early 1970s when educators in Ontario and Victoria abandoned Britishness in favor of multiculturalism Chapters explore how textbooks portrayed imperialism the close relationship between religious education and Britishness and efforts to end assimilationist Anglocentrism and promote equality in education The book contributes to British World scholarship by demonstrating how decolonization precipitated a massive search for identity in Ontario and Victoria that continues to challenge educators and policy makers today
