Operating In The Dark The Accountability Crisis In Canadas Health Care System:

Health Advocacy, Inc. Sharon Batt, 2017-06-15 Over the past several decades a gradual reduction in state funding has pressured patient groups into forming private sector partnerships raising an important ethical question do these alliances ultimately lead to policies that are counter to the public interest Health activist scholar and cancer survivor Sharon Batt examines the issue by investigating Canada's breast cancer movement from 1990 to 2010 Health Advocacy Inc dissects the relationship between the companies that sell pharmaceuticals and the individuals who use them drawing links between neoliberalism and corporate financing and the ensuing threat to the public health care system Combining archival analysis interviews with advocacy and industry representatives and personal observation Batt argues that the resulting power imbalance continues to challenge the groups ability to put patients interests ahead of those of the funders A movement that once encouraged democratic participation in the development of health policy now eerily echoes the demands of the pharmaceutical industry Batt's thorough account of this shift defines the stakes of activism in public health today

Operating in the Dark Lisa Priest, 1998 Universal health care is a constant source of pride and comfort to Canadians But how much control do we as health care consumers have over our own treatment How do we know which hospitals and doctors are the best What information is being withheld and at what cost to our health In Operating in the Dark Lisa Priest discovers that the system is set up for the convenience of the doctors and hospitals The vulnerable sick are often left to trust blindly with little way of knowing if they're getting the best care possible What Priest finds is that the Canadian health care system is often remiss in communicating information to the people who use it Priest argues that for a fair and accessible health care system we must demand more information from those doctors and hospitals that keep patients in the dark
