LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE IS THE ART of creating visually interesting and functional designs in the outdoor environment such as parks gardens buildings and roads These skilled and creative professionals take responsibility for the health and safety of the public in the work they do while also preserving the environment They deal with plants of all kinds from ground covers to trees but they are particularly adept at designing hardscape features like fountains retaining walls pathways and arbors Landscape designers are not licensed or regulated and are therefore not involved in projects that affect public health and safety Their work is similar to that of landscape architects but it is usually restricted to residential yards and gardens Landscape designers are generally very knowledgeable about plant materials and their designs are usually focused on softscapes with hardscape features such as patios pergolas and ponds acting as accents in the overall landscape design Most landscape designers do not have experience in construction oversight local regulations site engineering and building techniques like landscape architects do The work of landscape architects is everywhere It surrounds us with the beauty and usefulness of public parks zoos urban plazas highways airports corporate headquarters waterfronts and institutional buildings Stunning examples of large scale landscape architecture include iconic sites such as New York s Central Park the Emerald Necklace in Boston and the planned community of Reston Virginia More and more these days landscape architects are innovators Consider the 606 also called the Bloomingdale Trail in Chicago It was formerly a 2 7 elevated railroad but it has been transformed into a greenway linear park and path for bicyclists and runners that connects multiple communities With its unique construction raised landscape art installations and inspiring views it has become an impressive urban oasis Landscape designers create drawings of proposed projects sometimes with pencil and paper but more often with computer

McDonald, Susan Parnell, Maria Schewenius, Marte Sendstad, Karen C. Seto, Cathy Wilkinson, 2013-09-21 Urbanization is a global phenomenon and the book emphasizes that this is not just a social technological process It is also a social ecological process where cities are places for nature and where cities also are dependent on and have impacts on the biosphere at different scales from local to global The book is a global assessment and delivers four main conclusions Urban areas are expanding faster than urban populations Half the increase in urban land across the world over the next 20 years will occur in Asia with the most extensive change expected to take place in India and China Urban areas modify their local and regional climate through the urban heat island effect and by altering precipitation patterns which together will have significant impacts on net primary production ecosystem health and biodiversity Urban expansion will heavily draw on natural resources including water on a global scale and will often consume prime agricultural land with knock on effects on biodiversity and ecosystem services elsewhere Future urban expansion will often occur in areas where the capacity for formal governance is restricted which will constrain the protection of biodiversity and management of ecosystem services
