

Similarly, the purpose of QPM => Organizational Performance Management PA of HL 5 is

- Proactively manage the organization's performance to meet its business objectives.
- Iteratively analyzing aggregated project data, identifying gaps in performance against the business objectives, and selecting and deploying improvements to close the gaps.

Similarly the QPM PA of HL 5 is satisfied by the combined achievement of QPP and QPM PAs of HL 4.

The QPM PA addresses improved product quality (e.g., functionality, quality attributes), increased productivity, increased process efficiency and effectiveness, increased consistency in meeting budget and schedule, greater customer and end-user satisfaction, shorter development or production time to change functionality, add new features, or adapt to new technologies, and improved use of resources across the organization while the QPP PAs satisfy them at the same level by addressing: organizational quantitative quality and process performance objectives based on business, establishing definitions of the measures to be used in process performance analysis, establishing process performance baselines and process performance models along with QPM which involves selecting sub-processes and attributes critical to understanding performance and that help to achieve the project's quality and process performance objectives, selecting measures and analytic techniques to be used in quantitative management, monitoring the performance of selected sub-processes using statistical and other quantitative techniques, managing the project using statistical and other quantitative techniques to determine whether or not the project's objectives for quality and process performance are being satisfied.

Therefore,

$$HL5 = HL5 - HL4$$

$$HL5 = f(CAR) - f(QPM)$$
