the crisis will not be overcome Unfortunately this is not fully understood today and initiatives to confront the crisis based on idealism and positivism flourish everywhere This makes research into the main epistemological reasons for the misunderstanding of the relationship between the reproduction of capital and the crisis of habitability an urgent task which is undertaken throughout the book Such misunderstanding is ultimately related to the old problem of philosophy the relationship between thought and being A problem that the crisis of habitability expresses as the insurmountable contradiction between capitalist humans and nature

Maritime Societies of the Viking and Medieval World James H. Barrett, Sarah Jane Gibbon, 2016-11-25 This book is a study of communities that drew their identity and livelihood from their relationships with water during a pivotal time in the creation of the social economic and political landscapes of northern Europe It focuses on the Baltic North and Irish Seas in the Viking Age ad 1050 1200 with a few later examples such as the Scottish Lordship of the Isles included to help illuminate less well documented earlier centuries Individual chapters introduce maritime worlds ranging from the Isle of Man to Gotland while also touching on the relationships between estate centres towns landing places and the sea in the more terrestrially oriented societies that surrounded northern Europe s main spheres of maritime interaction It is predominately an archaeological project but draws no arbitrary lines between the fields of historical archaeology history and literature The volume explores the complex relationships between long range interconnections and distinctive regional identities that are characteristic of maritime societies seeking to understand communities that were brought into being by their relationships with the sea and who set waves in motion that altered distant shores
