

Optical activity and circular dichroism

- Optical activity is a property of certain substances that rotate the plane of polarized light
- This phenomenon occurs due to the asymmetric structure of molecules, commonly found in organic compounds
- Circular dichroism refers to the differential absorption of left and right circularly polarized light by optically active substances
- It provides valuable information about the molecular structure and is widely used in biochemical studies

Practical example: Polarized sunglasses

- Optical activity is a property of certain materials that rotate the plane of polarized light passing through them
- In polarized sunglasses, this principle is applied to reduce glare
- Circular dichroism, a related effect, occurs when molecules absorb left and right circularly polarized light differently
- This feature is utilized in sunglasses to enhance contrast and visual clarity, significantly improving vision under bright conditions
