

Psych 355 Chapter 6 - Practical aspects of memory.

metacognition = your knowledge about your cognitive processes, as well as your control of these cognitive processes.

-Memory strategies 1: Memory strategies informed by memory concepts-

when using a memory strategy, you perform mental activities that can help improve you encoding and retrieval. Most help you remember something that you learned in the past i.e. lecture information.

-Divided Attention-

people are not as great at multitasking as they think and perform better when focusing all their mental efforts on one task at a time. Important when listening to lectures or reading you text. Distractions reduce the amount of information to which your able to attend.

-Working memory-

has limits. Phonological loop or visuospatial sketchpad may become overly taxed as a result of too much input arriving via the auditory or visual input modalities. Result is less info will make it to long-term memory. i.e. Can study slides before class or read text to familiarize yourself, making it less likely to be overwhelmed during lecture. Evidence on this shows mixed results. Slides being available make no diff on exams in some, and do make a diff for exams in others.

-Levels of processing-

we will recall info better if we process it at a deep level, rather than a shallow one.

-Elaboration-

If you want to emphasize elaboration, you will concentrate on the specific meaning of a particular concept; you'll also try to relate this concept to your prior knowledge and to interconnected concepts that you have already mastered. You should emphasize rich, elaborate encoding, for instance, by explaining a concept to yourself. If you use simple rehearsal = repeating the information you want to learn, you are not likely to benefit much in terms of accurate recall at some later point in time.

try to create why questions when trying to master complex material. Must use deep processing to think about the meaning of material and connect this new material w/ info you already know.

i.e. students in a psych personality course were able to learn more about the theories when they applied them to ppl they know and political figures (did this in a journal).

-Distinctiveness-

Unity and Fragmentation in Psychology Nicolò Gaj,2016-03-02 Psychology has always defined itself as a science and yet it has lacked the theoretical and methodological unity regarded as characteristic of the natural sciences Nicol Gaj explores the topical question of unification in psychology setting out a conceptual framework for considerations of unity and disunity and exploring the evidence of its fragmentation He takes a critical look at the history of the most prominent attempts at unification and at the desirability and feasibility of the whole project The book represents a unique and valuable attempt to address the issue of unification from a philosophical perspective and via a combination of theoretical and empirical research

Training Behaviour Therapists (Psychology Revivals) Derek Milne,2015-03-27 Originally published in 1986 one of the major developments in behavioural psychotherapy and mental health in the previous decade had been the growing involvement of non psychologists in behaviour therapy This was a result of the fact that there were too few psychologists to cope with problem behaviour and that other professionals or carers began to appreciate more clearly their potential as agents of behaviour change Foremost among these mediators of therapy were parents nurses particularly psychiatric nurses and teachers especially remedial teachers Their involvement had greatly increased the efficiency of behaviour therapy at the time and opened up a new era in applied psychology It also entailed the development of new training formats evaluation procedures and implementation strategies The main aim of this book was to provide a summary of the research relevant to these issues and to offer practical guidelines to those who were interested in training or being trained as behaviour therapists For this reason there are chapters by researchers who have been involved in training parents nurses and teachers These chapters provide a detailed account of training in a form that was rarely available in published form at the time and even today should be of great assistance to readers
