- a concept used to investigate changes/fluctuations in the practice of identification
- presumes that diasporic culture accommodates cultural amalgamation

- the value-laden concept of heritage can accept a hybrid cultural practice if the diaspora values it to be significant for present safeguarding and future transmission
- the strong connection between heritage and identity can stop the manifestation of hybrid cultural practices
- heritage as 'cultural capital' – 'a way of connecting people with each other and with the environment that surrounds them' (Harrison 2010: p.245)
