differences in welfare benefits cannot be explained by variations in wage levels or costs of living The states with higher welfare benefits act as magnets by attracting or retaining poor people In the competition to avoid becoming welfare havens states have cut welfare benefits in real dollars by more than one third since 1970 The authors propose the establishment of a minimum federal welfare standard which would both reduce the interstate variation in welfare benefits and stem their overall decline Peterson and Rom develop their argument in four steps First they show how the politics of welfare magnets works in a case study of policymaking in Wisconsin Second they present their analysis of the overall magnet effect in American state politics finding evidence that states with high welfare benefits experiencing disproportionate growth in their poverty rates make deeper welfare cuts Third they describe the process by which the current system came into being identifying the reform efforts and political crises that have contributed to the centralization of welfare policy as well as the regional partisan and group interests that have resisted these changes Finally the authors propose a practical step that can go a long way toward achieving a national welfare standard then assess its cost benefits and political feasibility Unemployment Insurance in Michigan Robert Warren Klein,1988 Subject Guide to Books in Print ,1996 Public Welfare ,1987
