

Electricity and Magnetism Problems

Concepts and principles from electricity and magnetism can solve the problems in this section. The problems are divided into five groups according to the major principles required for solution: (1) electric force and field; (2) electric potential energy; (3) electric power; (4) circuits; and (5) magnetic force and field. The specific principles required are indicated in italics at the beginning of each problem.

Electric Force and Field

1. Electric Force: You and a friend are doing the laundry when you unload the dryer and the discussion comes around to static electricity. Your friend wants to get some idea of the amount of charge that causes static cling. You immediately take two empty soda cans, which each have a mass of 120 grams, from the recycling bin. You tie the cans to the two ends of a string (one to each end) and hang the center of the string over a nail sticking out of the wall. Each can now hangs straight down 30 cm from the nail. You take your flannel shirt from the dryer and touch it to the cans, which are touching each other. The cans move apart until they hang stationary at an angle of 10° from the vertical. Assuming that there are equal amounts of charge on each can, you now calculate the amount of charge transferred from your shirt.
2. Electric Force: You are part of a design team assigned the task of making an electronic oscillator that will be the timing mechanism of a micro-machine. You start by trying to understand a simple model which is an electron moving along an axis through the center and perpendicular to the plane of a thin positively charged ring. You need to determine how the oscillation frequency of the electron depends on the size and charge of the ring for displacements of the electron from the center of the ring which are small compared to the size of the ring. A team member suggests that you first determine the acceleration of the electron along the axis as a function of the size and charge of the ring and then use that expression to determine the oscillation frequency of the electron for small oscillations.
3. Electric Force: You are spending the summer working for a chemical company. Your boss has asked you to determine where a chlorine ion of effective charge $-e$ would situate itself near a carbon dioxide ion. The carbon dioxide ion is composed of 2 oxygen ions each with an effective charge $-2e$ and a carbon ion with an effective charge $+3e$. These ions are arranged in a line with the carbon ion sandwiched midway between the two oxygen ions. The distance between each oxygen ion and the carbon ion is 3.0×10^{-11} m. Assuming that the chlorine ion is on a line that is perpendicular to the axis of the carbon dioxide ion and that the line goes through the carbon ion, what is the equilibrium distance for the chlorine ion relative to the carbon ion on this line? For simplicity, you assume that the carbon dioxide ion does not deform in the presence of the chlorine ion. Looking in your trusty physics textbook, you find the charge of the electron is 1.60×10^{-19} C.
4. Electric Force: You have been asked to review a new apparatus, which is proposed for use at a new semiconductor ion implantation facility. One part of the apparatus is used to slow down He ions which are positive and have a charge twice that of an electron (He^{++}). This
