This Volkswagen missed the boat.

The chrome strip on the glove compartment is blued and must be replaced. Chrome on your wheel isn't here either. It, Inspector Ken Kowalski did.

There are 1,200 cars in the Volkswagen factory with only one job to do: Volkswagen is each one of production. 1000 Volkswagen are produced daily, there are more inspectors than cars.

Every third inspector is tested upon checking each car, every wheel is checked. VW's have been repaired for surface scratches barely visible to the eye.

Final inspection is really something. VW inspectors not only can tell the line cars the Volkswagen Standard car test sheet, but up 100 check points, get ahead to the automatic brake stand, and are "set" to see VW out of line.

This preoccupation with detail means the VW lasts longer and requires less maintenance, by and large, than other cars. It also means a used VW depreciates less than any other car.

"We think the lemons you get the photo.

"Remember those great Volkswagen ads?"

Office boys read them aloud by the water cooler. College kids recited them at campus parties.

They were the marketing conversation piece of the sixties.

To let the Beetle and its advertising pass on without a permanent record seemed a crying shame.

For surely, no car was ever more loved, no advertising more admired.

In a way the two became indivisible. The charming, honest advertising became part of the charm and honesty of the car.

If you've ever owned a Beetle, if you've ever chuckled at a Volkswagen advertisement, or if you simply appreciate wit and style, you'll enjoy this book.

It's the tale of an ugly duckling that became an office pin-up.
