Okano, 2015-09-16 Nonformal Education and Civil Society in Japan critically examines an aspect of education that has received little attention to date intentional teaching and learning activities that occur outside formal schooling In the last two decades nonformal education has rapidly increased in extent and significance This is because individual needs for education have become so diverse and rapidly changing that formal education alone is unable to satisfy them Increasingly diverse demands on education resulted from a combination of transnational migration heightened human rights awareness the aging population and competition in the globalised labour market Some in the private sector saw this situation as a business opportunity Others in the civil society volunteered to assist the vulnerable The rise in nonformal education has also been facilitated by national policy developments since the 1990s Drawing on case studies this book illuminates a diverse range of nonformal education activities and suggests that the nature of the relationship between nonformal education and mainstream schooling has changed Not only have the two sectors become more interdependent but the formal education sector increasingly acknowledges nonformal education's important and necessary roles These changes signal a significant departure from the past in the overall functioning of Japanese education The case studies include neighbourhood homework clubs for migrant children community based literacy classes after school care programs sport clubs alternative schools for long term absent students schools for foreigners training in intercultural competence at universities and corporations k minkan community halls and lifelong learning for the seniors This book will appeal to both scholars of Japanese Studies Asian Studies and those of comparative education and sociology anthropology of education

Women in Their Thirties in Japan Kaori H. Okano, 2025-06-20 This book examines the lived experiences of a group of Japanese women through their thirties revealing the dynamic of human agency responding to the social changes of Japan's lost decades Exploring how these working class women made choices and acted on them in pursuit of happiness through their thirties the book highlights how in so doing they charted their various life course trajectories Adopting a longitudinal ethnography approach it tells the story of 18 Kobe women in real time based on their narratives at different points in time since 1989 when they were in high school In this process intra class differentiation gradually emerged amongst the nontertiary educated women with similar family backgrounds The women maintained multiple identities based on their social roles in expanding human relationships as mother wife daughter in law and singlehood and gradually shifted in relative weight across these identities as they navigated their thirties Demonstrating the collective potential of Japanese women to resist the dominant institutional practices and social norms this book will appeal to students and scholars of gender studies and Japanese studies particularly Japanese culture and society

Japan's Changing Generations Gordon Mathews, Bruce White, 2012-10-02 This book argues that the generation gap in Japan is something more than young people resisting the adult social order before entering and conforming to that order Rather it signifies something more fundamental the emergence of a new Japan which may be quite different from the Japan of postwar decades It argues that while young people in Japan in their teens twenties and early thirties are not engaged in overt social or political resistance they are turning against the existing Japanese social order whose legitimacy has been undermined by the past decade of economic downturn The book shows how young people in Japan are thinking about their bodies and identities their social relationships and their employment and parenting in new and generationally contextual ways that may help to create a future Japan quite different from Japan of the recent past
