Patronage, Practice, and the Culture of American Science Hugh Richard Slotten, 1994-06-24 In this book Hugh Richard Slotten explores the institutional and cultural history of science in the United States The main focus is on the activities of Alexander Dallas Bache great grandson of Benjamin Franklin and the acknowledged chief of the American scientific community during the second third of the nineteenth century Bache played a central role in the organization and management of a number of key scientific institutions including the American Association for the Advancement of Science the Smithsonian Institution and the National Academy of Sciences But his dominance in these institutions was made possible through his control of an organization less well known today the United States Coast Survey which he superintended from 1843 until his death in 1867 Under Bache s command the Coast Survey became the central scientific institution in antebellum America Using richly detailed archival records Slotten pursues an analysis of Bache and the Coast Survey that illuminates important historiographic themes We gain a better understanding of the particular style of nineteenth century American science by examining the role of the Coast Survey as a source of patronage Perhaps most important this study explores the ways in which scientific knowledge and practice are embedded within local contexts Although Bache sought to use the Coast Survey to raise the status of American science partly by emulating European scientific elites his efforts also reflected the cultural and political values of antebellum America Slotten thus analyzes the interrelationship between political culture patterns of patronage and the institutional practice of science in the United States The Mangle of Practice Andrew Pickering, 2010-12-15 This ambitious book by one of the most original and provocative thinkers in science studies offers a sophisticated new understanding of the nature of scientific mathematical and engineering practice and the production of scientific knowledge Andrew Pickering offers a new approach to the unpredictable nature of change in science taking into account the extraordinary number of factors social technological conceptual and natural that interact to affect the creation of scientific knowledge In his view machines instruments facts theories conceptual and mathematical structures disciplined practices and human beings are in constantly shifting relationships with one another mangled together in unforeseeable ways that are shaped by the contingencies of culture time and place Situating material as well as human agency in their larger cultural context Pickering uses case studies to show how this picture of the open changeable nature of science advances a richer understanding of scientific work both past and present Pickering examines in detail the building of the bubble chamber in particle physics the search for the quark the construction of the quaternion system in mathematics and the introduction of computer controlled machine tools in industry He uses these examples to address the most basic elements of scientific practice the development of experimental apparatus the production of facts the development of theory and the interrelation of machines and social organization
