

Annotated Bibliography with APA citations

Annotation is the emphasizing of important points in a document. A professor may request an annotated bibliography during your research process in order to provide guidance in your research, to ensure that you understand your research materials, and to provide you with a basis to get started on your research project. If your professor requests a particular format for an annotated bibliography, follow it; otherwise, the standard format of an annotated bibliography is:

- 1) a citation for the source that you reviewed in your research
- 2) three or four sentences summarizing the work

(Annotated bibliographies need to be in a double-spaced format, but are shown here single-spaced for concision.)

Annotated Bibliography

Clanton, B. (1976). A Comparative Study of Three American Witchcraft Plays. San Marcos: Texas State University.

Clanton describes how innocent people suffer in the community because of the greed, selfishness, and power of a certain few. She also analyses the historical accuracy of The Crucible to the Salem witch trials, noting the difficulty of criticizing the play since it was created in modern times.

Fhaner, B. (1997). The Crucible. Magill's Cinema Annual 16, 116-118.

Fhaner makes two main points regarding Arthur Miller's The Crucible: 2) it is Miller's most-produced and arguably most powerful play; 1) the play was intended to comment on the outrageous and shameful way many people responded to the pressures of McCarthyism, turning over their friends, colleagues, and neighbors to authorities and telling outright lies.

Martine, J. (1993). The Crucible: Politics, Property, and Pretense. New York: Twayne Publishers.

Martine discusses Arthur Miller's life and works, providing a brief critique of both the literature and drama of The Crucible as reflective of both seventeenth-century America and the United States of the 1950's.
