Religion and Spirituality as Relevant Dimensions in Psychiatric Patients—From Research to Practice

Samuel Pfeifer

Marburg Institute of Religion and Psychotherapy, 35039 Marburg, Germany; samuelpfeifer@gmail.com

Abstract: Background: Associations between psychiatric syndromes and religion/spirituality (R/S) are confounded by a diversity of descriptive instruments, the interpretation of statistical correlations, and the highly individual experience of illness. Method: This presentation focuses on three major syndromes in psychiatric patients: (a) delusions with religious content, (b) depressive conditions, and (c) anxiety disorders. Results: The content of delusions is marked by cultural factors, including religious concepts. There is empirical evidence that R/S may have a supportive role in patients with schizophrenia. Affective disorders show a more varied pattern of causality—a better outcome in about 60%, but in 10%, there seems to be a higher incidence in patients with a conservative, guilt-oriented, religious background. In anxiety disorders, a meta-analysis could not find a correlation between R/S and clinical syndromes. However, research into the emerging field of “spiritual struggles” has shown an interaction between subjective anxieties and religious conflicts, strongly influenced by the level of neuroticism beyond religious factors. Conclusions: The correlation of R/S and dysfunctional psychological experience may be summarized in three concepts (culture, conflict, and coping), modulated by the neurobiological basis of psychiatric disorders.

Keywords: religion; spirituality; delusions; schizophrenia; affective disorders; anxiety; neuroticism; spiritual struggles; coping

1. Introduction

Exploring the nature of major psychiatric disorders, with a special reference to religious/spiritual aspects, has its own challenges. Clinical work, even if it is research oriented, is going deeper than just applying “objective” measurement scales to a group of stratified study participants. Rather, clinical perspectives are qualitative, describing the subjective experience of illness in the individual person (Kleinman 1988), listening to both the burden and the suffering as well as the ways of trying to understand and to cope with the illness. Thus, clinical psychiatry has a deeply person-centered approach (Akhtar et al. 2020), which is not always matched by so-called objective research. Listening to individual stories, and deeply personal perspectives of suffering, and trying to existentially empathize with psychiatric patients cannot be pressed into the rigid molds of statistics. In contrast, contemporary research is somewhat dominated by figure-based research and, in many fields, by an emphasis of neurobiology over phenomenological, descriptive publications. The contemporary clinician, therefore, must look at quantitative research and meta-analyses, trying to interpret them in the context of person-centered psychiatry (Christodoulou et al. 2008).

Thus, approaching the relationship between psychiatric syndromes and religion/spirituality (R/S) requires the consideration of several preliminary aspects: the question of causality, the interpretation of statistical correlations, and the role of coping resources, to name but a few. The wording “relevant dimensions in psychiatric patients” of the title points to the subjective, existential aspects of the experience of the individual.

The meta-analyses of complex correlations in mental health pose their own challenges (Cuijpers 2016). There are concerns about the measurement of spirituality (Koenig 2008)—many studies do not sufficiently measure intrinsic or extrinsic religiosity and do not

Faith Community Nursing Janet Susan Hickman, 2006 This unique text combines traditional parish nursing content with community health nursing methodology coverage of community and faith community assessment and health education and health promotion disease prevention programming Hawaii and Christian Religious Addiction James Slobodzien, 2004 A literature review was conducted on the relatively newly recognized phenomenon of religious addiction within Christianity The symptoms beliefs and stages of religious addiction along with the characteristics of religiously addictive organizations are also considered In addition a religious attitudes inventory was designed to assess general spirituality religiously addictive beliefs religiously addictive symptoms and church leadership practices The author surveyed ministers psychologists psychiatrists and the general public to assess the relationship between religious addiction and church leadership More specifically the purpose of this survey was to attempt to determine if religiously addictive beliefs and symptoms are more positively correlated with churches structured upon a self selected authoritarian hierarchical style of leadership versus an elected collegial style of church leadership In the latter power and authority is equally vested in each of a number of elected church leaders The results of this survey suggest the possibility of a positive correlation between the self selected minister group and their responses to religious addictive beliefs and symptoms Further study of a prospective nature with larger samples is necessary to define this relationship more clearly Additional research with onsite observation and assessments is necessary to adequately verify the possible link between religious addiction and church leadership practices Future research must replicate this study with different samples to determine whether results obtained in the present survey generalize to similar groups

Aspects in Contexts, 2021-07-26 Psychology of religion has been enjoying considerable attention of late the number of publications and people involved in the field is rapidly increasing It is however one of the oldest branches within psychology in general and one of the few in which an interdisciplinary approach has been kept alive and fostered The fate of the field has been quite varied in the countries where psychology of religion has been initiated and developed during the 20th century In this volume some aspects of this international history are examined Coming from six different Western countries each of the contributors has a record in the historiography of psychology and profound knowledge of psychology of religion Their approaches combine elements from the history of mentalities the social history of science and biographical studies The volume contains in depth treatments of such topics as the growth of the field as reflected in university politics developments within international organizations and the personal involvement of contributors to the field A wealth of information is provided on the background of the work of well known psychologists of religion like James Henry Leuba Oskar Pfister Gordon Allport Werner Gruehn Antoine Vergote and others

Religion and Spirituality in Psychiatry Philippe Huguelet,Harold G. Koenig,2009-03-30 Although medicine is practised in a secular setting religious and spiritual issues have an impact on patient perspectives regarding their health and the management of any disorders that may afflict them This is especially true in psychiatry as feelings of spirituality and religiousness are very prevalent among the mentally ill Clinicians are rarely aware of the importance of religion and understand little of its value as a mediating force for coping with mental illness This book addresses various issues concerning mental illness in psychiatry the relation of religious issues to mental health the tension between a theoretical approach to problems and psychiatric approaches the importance of addressing these varying approaches in patient care and how to do so and differing ways to approach Christian Muslim and Buddhist patients
