

THE TRAINS AND THE RAILWAYS

RIDING THE TRAINS

Your first contact with Europe's railways will be a train ride. When you ride Amtrak or Metrol-North or CalTrain, you know what type of locomotives is up front, what kind of car you're riding in, the history of the route you're riding — indeed, you know it well enough to explain it all to practically anyone you encounter.

On your first visit to Europe things are different. Everything is new to you, and you may even feel ill at ease not knowing about locomotives and cars and routes. Eventually you will find books that liberally list the locomotives and explain the history, but for now take it in one thing at a time.

Posted in the stations are timetables listing all the departures and arrivals in chronological order. Find the listing for your departure time, or look at the clock and hunt for the next train going your way. The timetable will tell you which track it will be on. (In Britain it will be platform number, not track number.) The two sides of the platform have different numbers. Occasionally you'll find a supplemental letter or design-

This section of a departure timetable from Frankfurt shows only suburban trains (long-distance trains are shown in red, which doesn't show well in the photo). The S and the number indicates the route. Some trains depart from upper level numbered tracks, and others (indicated with the S in the circle) from the lower level. Note the airplane symbols for the 1023 and 1025 departures to the airport.

This indicator shows a 1,339 departure from track 4 for Redlands via Wallburg and Linburg (left) — and the train is about 8 minutes late.

markers, such as "2B" or "5 North." Platforms have sections marked by letters. An announcement may tell you that first-class cars will be in sector B and second-class cars in sectors C and D, or you may find signs showing the makeup or consist of the principal trains and the location on the platform where the cars will be. You may also see indicators at the platforms telling what the next train will be.

Occasionally there are last-minute changes. Which the signs, indicators, and video screens. If you hear an announcement—event you don't understand and everyone at your platform groans to a different platform, that's a good indication you should do the same, or at least ask someone.

On the continent many through trains carry cars to several destinations, and at junctions the cars are uncoupled and switched into other trains. You'll want to find a car going in your direction.

Notably, severity and duration of diarrhoea platelet counts need to also be taken into account of this case. This is because from the platelet study

Near the door of this French coach is a T, indicating first class, a note saying this door is the one for places 11 to 34 (so you don't have to walk the whole length of the car), and symbols for restaurant, cigarette books, and air conditioning (sun and snowflakes). The reversible plate next to the door indicates that this is train 473 from Paris (Montparnasse station) to Port-Bou.
